CAI approach: tell them help is available

By TIMOTHY OWENS

"Our concern is with the sick alcoholic and with alcoholism. Our concern is when abuse of alcohol or drugs results in death and injury and shattered lives."

These are the operating principles of the staff of the Center for Addictive Illnesses (CAI), according to Arthur S. McLellan, M.D., CAI president and director. Located in Morristown, the center is a joint venture of Overlook Hospital, Summit, and Morristown Memorial Hospital, and affiliated with Rutgers University. CAI, which was originally part of Overlook and then moved to its present location about four years ago, has grown to become New Jersey's largest state-licensed, accredited, non-profit inpatient and outpatient treatment and rehabilitation facility for alcoholism and chemical (drug) dependency.

Part of CAI's approach to treatment of alcoholism and drug addiction is the education process by which misconceptions about addiction can be corrected and, armed with proper knowledge and understanding, those afflicted will realize help is available.

"Most individuals consider and visualize the alcoholic in terms of skid row — total dysfunction," Dr. McLellan explained. "Yet, this really represents somewhere between 3 and 5 percent of alcoholics.

"Often the drug addict is thought of as the crazed person in the streetwise sub-culture, but this individual represents an extremely small percentage," McLellan said.

"The great majority of people who are disabled with addiction are people like you and me who for one reason or another have this disease. And it is recognized that alcoholism and other forms of addiction run in families with a very strong preponderance of evidence pointing to the factor of inherited susceptibility to chemical substances."

Blanche Rifendifer, vice president-nursing at CAI, noted, "If you ask the public to close their eyes and give you a picture of an alcoholic, they're going to tell you it's a man and he's drinking out of a brown paper bag. They're not going to see their physician, their lawyer, their potential worker, their son or daughter as alcoholics."

Dispelling these misconceptions is essential to treatment according to those at CAI.

Robert Ericksen, Ph.D., clinical psychologist at CAI, noted that untreated, alcoholism is a progressive disease that can kill.

"While there's no cure, there is recovery," Dr. Ericksen said. "And recovery can be more fulfilling than most alcoholics realize. Typically, recovering alcoholics not only pick up the threads of their previous lives, they live even better, more productive lives than before. And families tend to stay intact. So there's tremendous potential, tremendous reward for significant recovery."

One part of society that is recognizing this potential is the business world. Statistics show that alcoholism and drug abuse comprise the single major problem affecting job performance. The use of drugs on the job by factory workers, white collar workers and executives costs the American economy more than $25 billion per year — $16.6 billion of that amount in lost productivity alone. Employees dependent upon alcohol or drugs function at only 67 percent of their work potential and have accident rates 36 times the rate of their fellow non-addicted workers.

"For years," said Joan Theubel, director/corporate liaison with CAI, "industry has been aware of the personal and business tolls exacted by alcohol and chemical dependency. But for a long time, industry felt helpless to act against alcoholism in particular on the supposition that little if anything could be done for the alcoholic. Drug addiction was considered bad enough but alcoholism had to be a totally lost cause."

"The prognosis for good recovery on the part of many alcoholics has prompted renewed and intensified efforts on the part of industry to help their employees who wish to be helped overcome alcohol and drugs. Far from being unsympathetic, employers clearly understand not only the economic toll, but the terrible human burden of alcoholism and drug abuse and are sincerely anxious to alleviate suffering."

According to Theubel, although many individuals come to CAI on their own or through referrals from family, friends or physicians, increasingly, the center is helping employees referred to it through Employee Assistance Programs (EAP) at their place of business.

"An EAP is a concerted effort by the corporation to provide help for its employees," explained Theubel, "regardless of what the employee's problem might be — emotional, marital, financial, family, alcohol or

The Senior Citizens Council of Union County will hold its annual convention and installation of officers next Thursday at the L'Affaire restaurant on Route 22 in Mountainside.

Commissioner George J. Albanese of the state Department of Human Services, former Union County manager, will give the keynote address. Also scheduled to make a presentation will be Sunchita Tyson, regional program consultant for home health programs for the elderly, U.S. Department of Human Services, Region II. Ann Zahora, director of the New Jersey Division on Aging, Department of Community Affairs, also will address the convention.

secretary; Madeline Lancaster of Springfield, corresponding secretary; Julie Dudash of Winfield, treasurer; Joseph LaVista of Linden, assistant treasurer, and Victor Kruse of Westfield, Veronica Kane of Elizabeth and Louis Hershbin of New Providence, trustees.

County putting more emphasis on promotional programs: Grisi

Union County Manager Arthur J. Grisi has announced "a major shift" in the direction and operations of the county's informational and promotional efforts. It is designed to increase the county's visibility and better serve the public, he said.

The county's Office of Public Information is being expanded and upgraded "with an eye to attracting more revenue-producing businesses, industry and tourism to Union County, as well as increasing the awareness of county residents about programs and services," Grisi said. In the coming year, the county will increase its publications about all facets of county government and continue to undertake an intensive economic development program, he added.

Laura Covucci Kolnoski, 30, has been named director of the Office of Public Information, replacing Thomas W. Haedrich, who resigned in December 1983 to take a position in private industry.

Kolnoski, who was graduated from Rider College in Trenton in 1976, is a lifelong Linden resident and graduate of the Linden public school system. She has been employed as a reporter at WJDM radio in Elizabeth and the Elizabeth Daily Journal and joined the Union County Office of Public Information in June 1982 as a public information officer.

"Having grown up in Union County, I take great pride and pleasure in working to increase citizens' knowledge and awareness about what Union County has to offer," Kolnoski said. "We want everyone to know that Union County has it all — historic and cultural sites, 25 parks and recreational facilities, prime locations for business and industry, 10 hospitals, two colleges and a unique blend of urban and suburban communities. These assets, combined with our proximity to New York City, Newark International Airport, and the Jersey shore, make Union County an ideal place to live, work and do business."

Kolnoski has recently joined the Gateway Tourism Council, a group of six counties and private interests working together to promote tourism in this area. A regional brochure listing historic and cultural sites being published by the council will include several Union County's high points.

drugs. Counseling is provided, and, as required, referral to the proper professional agency or facility."

Several area corporations have set up EAPs, including the Mennen Company in Morristown, Ciba-Geigy in Summit and the General Motors Assembly Division in Linden.

Reflecting upon the "tremendous national cost to the United States of alcohol and drug abuse," GM Medical Director John Burling, M.D., emphasized the need for countermeasures "early on." What disturbs Dr. Burling is the prevalence of alcohol and drugs among teen-agers.

"Teens should be learning how to live and they should be developing their skills to live the fullest lives," Burling said. "Instead too many of them are becoming addicted to alcohol and chemicals."

The Substance Abuse Committee of GM Assembly Division's company EAP strive to identify employees with problems and to refer them to facilities such as CAI.

"Salvage rather than punish" is the philosophy at the plant, according to Burling.

Employers such as GM "typify the great efforts and major strides being taken by the industrial community to stem the economic losses associated with alcoholism and drug abuse and to stem the tide of human suffering too," said Theubel.

Peter M. Shields, director of the Union County Division on Aging, will be the master of ceremonies and Wanda Echan of Union will be chairman for the day.

Philip Pearlman, deputy director, and Teresa Reger, field representative, Union County Division on Aging, will install the officers.

The invocation will be given by the Rev. Donald B. Jones of the Trinity United Methodist Church in Rahway and the benediction by the Rev. George Sheridan of Union.

Evelyn Frank of Union, president, heads the slate of officers to be installed. Others who will be installed are: Philip J. Cohen of Union, second vice president; Alma Zeller of Springfield, recording

'Terms of Endearment' offers endearing moments to viewers

By BEA SMITH

"Terms of Endearment," which has been endearing movie viewers in no uncertain terms at the Union Twin Cinema in Union Center, should have had a sixth Oscar added to its five Academy awards this year. That sixth Oscar should have gone to Debra Winger, who is so unbearably good as Emma, the daughter of Aurora Greenway, played by Shirley MacLaine, the recipient of the Best Actress award.

Winger, a comparatively new actress, is literally bursting with talent, and thanks to James Brooks, another Oscar-clutcher, who won for Best Picture, Best Director and Best Screenwriter, she is given equal time in the film with MacLaine, a multi-talented, versatile veteran star. Whenever she pounces on screen, and that is practically all of the time, Winger dominates the scenes with her vigor and vitality, her youthful beauty and her unpretentious personality. She is unquestionably the finest young star to climb aboard the wagonload of superstar potentiality that Hollywood has to offer!

The versatile MacLaine (who, even now, is prominently displayed on Broadway in her own show), who has oftentimes been nominated for an Academy Award but never won one until this film, gives her finest performance in "Terms of Endearment." As Aurora, a firmly-determined woman, who cannot come to terms with human inadequacies, disapproving her daughter's husband, her daughter's pregnancies, her next-door neighbor's lecherous activities, she is truly superb. MacLaine puts all her talents to work to soften her role with many comedic moments. She is hilarious when she finally admits her attraction to her obnoxious, nebulous, former astronaut, next-door neighbor (played by Jack Nicholson, who received an Oscar as Best Supporting Actor). And her brilliance shines through when she is forced to accept the tragedy that befalls the entire family.

Nicholson, who underplays his role as MacLaine's eventual lover, cannot seem to get away from the character of Jack Nicholson. No matter what the script, he is still Jack Nicholson to the hilt. He should be grateful to the marvelous direction of Brooks, and the lighter moments he is offered in the script to show what he can do with comedy.

Brooks, a 43-year television producer and writer, makes his motion-picture debut in "Terms of Endearment" as a director, producer and screenwriter. When he bought the rights to Larry McMurtry's novel, it took him two years to convince studios that he could turn the script into a light comedy rather than a shaky comedy with tragic consequences. He even wrote in a part for Nicholson, and Paramount finally bought it. Reportedly, the film cost $10 million to make and has, to date, earned more than $100 million.

In addition to the picture's superstars, MacLaine, Nicholson and Winger, every member of the supporting cast is excellent.

Jeff Daniels, who plays Flat Horton, Emma's husband, shows a talent for realism and simplicity, particularly when he is confronted by his impossible mother-in-law. The Hortons' two sons, played by Troy Bishop and Huckleberry Fox, are endearingly convincing as they show individually torn emotions, at the constantly changing upheavals in their young lives. John Lithgow, who appears briefly as Emma's lover, is especially funny.

"Terms of Endearment" is a picture to laugh about, to cry about, and certainly to see more than once. If a viewer took a half-dozen handkerchiefs to see "Love Story," then this reviewer suggests taking a whole dozen to the Union Cinema to prepare for the best picture of the year, "Terms of Endearment."

'Desert Song' for Paper Mill

"The Desert Song, which opens Wednesday at the Paper Mill Playhouse, Millburn, will bring back Judith McCauley and Richard White, the two romantic stars of last season's hit "The New Moon." They will play the principal roles in the musical and will sing such numbers as "Desert Song," "One Alone," "Romance" and other Sigmund Romberg favorites. The show will run through June 10. "The Desert Song" first opened in New York on November 30, 1926.

There have been four film versions of "The Desert Song."

Membership in arts center project soaring

Family and corporate memberships in Rahway Landmarks, the nonprofit organization spearheading the Union County Arts Center project, have nearly quadrupled since January.

"A year ago, when our membership seemed to be holding at about 150, we would have been encouraged to see it grow to 200," says Dan Costigan, the organization's acting publicity director. "It subsequently dipped to 108 due to slow renewals, but has now passed the 400 mark."

The arts center project involves purchase and restoration of the 1,440-seat Old Rahway Theatre at the intersection of Irving, Main and Hamilton in downtown Rahway.

Costigan attributed the accelerating support primarily to increased media attention. "From the beginning, we have had good press and radio support," he says, "but lately the press has become actively involved in the project, and we're starting to get good TV coverage as well."

R.S. Sawyer, Rahway Landmarks' membership chairman, adds that area organizations have also contributed to the current membership growth. "More than 60 recent joiners have come from just one local church," he says, "and the local AARP has lately become another prime source."

The Rahway Chamber of Commerce, Rahway Historical Society, and the Garden State Theater Organ Society are among other organizations represented in the project.

Sawyer also noted that, since many memberships are taken out by families, the actual headcount of members is probably greater than 500. Regular annual memberships cost $15, and there is a $5 discount for students and senior citizens.

As for acquisition funding, at last count the organization had raised $93,075 toward the $175,000 needed for purchase. Nearly $10,000 of the already collected sum has come from one media campaign, and at least another $10,000 has been contributed by the membership over and above annual dues. Most individual contributions have been relatively small, but some have ranged as high as $5,000.

Under terms of an option contract with the theater's present owner, Landmarks has until July 4 to raise the funds necessary for purchase.
