Meeting the challenges

Each year, the incoming chairman of the Union County Board of Chosen Freeholders presents the board with new programs and a new focus for county government. This year was no exception. I set three new programs and several important goals for county government.

I also asked the board to continue the programs began by Freeholder Dan Sullivan, last year's chairman of the board. These programs, helped launch the lives of Union County residents in tangible ways and highlighted the quality of life we enjoy here — improving the resources we enjoy. They are:

- Project Pocket Parks provided matching grants that allowed municipalities to improve town parks, playgrounds and playing fields. Some towns used the money to protect open space. Others used the funds to create small parks in urban areas. All of these funds went toward improving the quality of lives in the 21 municipalities that make up Union County. We are reauthorizing the program and providing as much as $1 million in matching grants.

- Access 2000 was developed to ensure that every pupil in Union County has access to new computers with high-speed Internet connections and state-of-the-art software by the end of the year 2000. It also will provide training in computers and technology for teachers.

- The HEART Grant program provided individual grants to artists, artisans, musicians, theater groups and historians. These have helped enrich the lives of Union County residents and highlighted the tremendous reserve of artistic talent and cultural resources here.

I also asked the board to pursue three new programs in 1999 to enrich the quality of life in Union County and ensure better opportunities for our residents.

- The Franklin D. Schlar program will provide free tuition for any county resident attending Union County College who receives a B average or better. Higher education, in the form of a bachelor's or associate's degree, or formal technical training, has never been more important at any time in this nation's history.

- Downtown Union County grants will help communities to improve their business districts. In many ways our downtowns are the heart of their communities. They are an important economic engine, providing employment and opportunity for residents. These grants will provide the funding for improvements that will bring residents back to their downtowns, supporting their communities and merchants.

- Finally, I want to ensure that every young person in Union County is inoculated against known diseases. Over the past decade, public health officials across the nation have become concerned with the failure to inoculate children against curable diseases. So I am developing a public health program which will go into neighborhoods and offer vaccinations against measles, whooping cough, rubella and other potentially dangerous childhood illnesses. We'll charge.

These are the key areas where we think we can make a difference. As elected officials, we are working toward goals of healthier children, better education, a better quality of life and a work force with the opportunity to compete for better, high-tech jobs. That's why the residents of Union County elected me to be chairman of the board. I am confident my resources had to help to meet the challenges that lie ahead.

Voting booths: The next generation

By Mark Hrywna
Regional Editor

Union County voters will inaugurate a new generation of voting booths when they cast their ballots in Board of Education elections next month. Instead of turning levers, residents will be pushing buttons in much the same way they use a microwave.

No longer will pollsters spend more than half-an-hour setting up bulky, 1,000-pound voting booths. Citizens working the polls for nearly 14 hours on Election Day can instead deal with a 225-pound, 6-foot adjustable booth that also can swivel for easier wheelchair access.

Board of Elections workers have been demonstrating the new machines for the past several weeks at sites throughout the county in an effort to educate voters. Board of Elections Administrator Patricia Formato said, although the final schedule is tight, she'll try to get anywhere, anytime. The new machines, she said, also make much easier transport to the different sites.

Old voting booths took up to 45 minutes to set up while the new machines can be ready in as little to 15 minutes, if not sooner.

Not only setting up, the machines take less time but the tabulation of votes and breakdown of the polling site should be quicker as well, said Formato. See NEW, Page B2.

Three seek GOP line

Two former local elected officials and a former candidate for several offices hope to gain the Republican nomination in this year's Union County Freeholder race.

Former Cranford Mayor Wally Shackelford, former Summit Councilman Al Dill and Richard Revilla of Elizabeth are among those looking for the Republican nod. While the filing deadline for the freeholder election is April 15, Republicans will award the party label by a vote of members at their annual convention scheduled for March 29 at 7 p.m. in Summit High School, 125 Kent Place Boulevard.

"We think it's a well-balanced ticket," says Revilla from the district of the county. Shackelford will know in the Cranford area; Dill represents the northern region; and Revilla is the southern region. Shackelford is the former county chair, Frank McDermott.

Dill was elected to represent Summit's 1st Ward three times, serving for nine years before choosing not to run for re-election in 1997.

A resident of Summit for more than three decades, Dill served as a commissioner to the Union County Board of Health in 1995 and 1996.

Summit Republican Municipal Chairman Dr. Eric Munoz said his city's delegation will support Dill for the party's nomination and is hopeful, "but we'll see."

Shackelford, who lost his bid for re-election in 1998 by 200 votes, served as mayor in his final year on the Cranford Township Committee. An advocate of "residential conservation" while his freeholder board, he has been frustrated by the fact there has not been equal representation of both political parties for the last year.

"You need a two-party system" said Shackelford, citing the hefty raise the Democratic-controlled board gave themselves, "an excellent example of 'who is minding the store.'"

"I grew up in a family where I was taught that if you want something done, do it yourself," he added, noting that while many people complain about being dissatisfied, few are willing to step up to the plate.

But he is well aware winning one of the freeholder seats will not be an easy task.

"It will be like climbing Mount Everest," said Shackelford, but with hard work he believes he definitely "has a shot." However, headlines he faces a formidable task ahead in raising the campaign funds needed to do the job right.

Cranford Republican Municipal Committee Chairman, while certainly supportive of Shackelford's desire to seek the nomination, agreed it will not be an easy road.

"I support Wally in this endeavor and wish him every success," he said, but emphasized the felt an obligation to warn him "this will be an uphill battle to crack the armor" of the Democratic stronghold.

Shackelford has been a teacher at Somerset County Vocational & Technical High School since 1970, where he is a math and science instructor for learning disabled students. He also served five years as union president and has been a Union County GOP committee member since the early 1980s.

A 20-year Cranford resident, Shackelford is married and the father of two children.

Revilla ran unsuccessfully for Assembly in the 20th District in 1995 and 1997, and for Elizabeth's 6th Ward council seat in 1994. Although in law enforcement, Revilla said he "got a lot of exposure to policy and legislation" while being an Assembly member.

A resident of Elizabeth for most of his life, Revilla is a Department of Public Health and Safety officer's Elizabeth office. He has been a commissioner for the Elizabeth Housing Authority since 1994, serving as vice chairman in 1997 and chairman in 1998.

Medical waste plant back on the agenda

By Mark Hrywna
Regional Editor

A medical waste treatment plant slated for Linden, Trenton Point station to be back on the Union County Board of Chosen Freeholders' agenda. The freeholders approved a resolution at their meeting last week that would include the facility in the county's solid waste management plan.

A public hearing is scheduled before the board April 15, when a vote is expected. The location for the treatment facility would be 4400 Tremley Point Road, an industrial area surrounded by the Railway River and the Arthur Kill Waterway.

Earth Care Systems Inc. has proposed a 12,000-square-foot plant to treat regulated medical waste including human blood and blood products, animal waste, cultures, tissues, bandages, gloves, bedding and sheets, stained with blood or human waste, as well as plastic syringes, from hospitals and other facilities.

Freeholder Chester Holmes of Rahway, the board's liaison to the Union County Utilities Authority, said he has not found anything wrong with the proposed plan. He said the board sent the proposal back to the UCUA for more information after opposition arose at a public hearing in August

In a report submitted to the freeholder board, Eugene C. Cole of Duncort Health Services of Durham, N.C., made several recommendations including sending the waste to an out-of-state landfill. Cole was hired by the UCUA to study the proposal and provide recommendations to the freeholders.

The site and its location appear to be a good one for a symmetrical regulated medical waste treatment facility.

Freeholder Al Mirabella of Roselle Park said the most significant difference from the original proposal is that the waste will not be incinerated. "We sent it back for further study because there were some questions about the incineration of such waste."

William Fidurski, chairman of the Clark Environmental Commission, said his primary concern is the transportation of the waste through Union County and the surrounding area. The fact that it will be sent to a landfill rather than incinerated does not change his position.

Although Cole, in his report, wrote that "unregulated wastes being transported through a community to the treatment facility presents virtually no public health risks," Fidurski disagrees.

Fidurski, a retired field agent for the U.S. Public Health Service, said the potential exists for Third World pathogens to enter the area and there are no restrictions on how the materials are to be transported.

In its application to the county, Earth Care proposed it will be able to handle 18,000 tons of medical waste. See WASTE, Page B2.

FAA: Ocean routing would delay flights and airspace redesign project

By Mark Hrywna
Regional Editor

Federal Aviation Administration officials say a live test of ocean routing would adversely affect scheduling and safety at Newark International Airport as well as delay the agency's National Airspace Redesign project which started last summer.

The redesign project is expected to take up to five years to complete and different routing — including ocean routing — will be considered, said FAA Administrator Langley Gary in a letter to Congressman Robert Menendez, D-N.J., last week.

The FAA would have to "change a significant number of flight paths in the metropolitan area" in order to implement ocean routing. "Due to airspace complexities in the metropolitan area and along the eastern seaboard, this would take years to complete and would delay work of the National Airspace Redesign," said Gary.

"It's essential that the FAA accelerate the design and implementation of the airspace redesign project so that we can provide a quieter environment for residents," said Menendez, whose district includes parts of Elizabeth, Linden and Hudson County.

The FAA would have to divert resources — both people and dollars — away from the project to design and implement the ocean routing, he said.

The bill's airspace redesign work, passed in 1997, legislation authorized by Congressman Bob Franks, R-Texas, to require the FAA to conduct a five to six-month test of ocean routing is still in the House Transportation and Infrastructure Committee.

The bill would direct the secretary of transportation to conduct a six-month live test to determine the costs and benefits of requiring airplanes taking off from Newark Airport to fly over the ocean.

If approved, Franks' bill would require the secretary of transportation to report to Congress within one year on the results of the test. The report would include an analysis of the effects on noise reduction of ocean routing and any recommendations and comments concerning ocean routing of airplanes.

Congressman Bill Pascrell, D-N.J., whose district includes parts of Essex and Passaic counties, said the FAA is going about it the "right way" — "to get an early commitment from the FAA that the airspace redesign would be conducted and begin in the New York-New Jersey metropolitan area. He said, "To delay it in any manner with respect to how to help our cause."

Doug Tansley, a spokesperson for Franks' office, said the congressman's bill to require the FAA to test ocean routing for six months is still in committee but hopes to have it included in a larger FAA reauthorization bill. "The FAA has been letting us float for years," said Tansley, "which is exactly why we introduced the ocean routing bill to require them to do it."

The success of the ocean routing bill, said, depends on how much support it receives from the New Jersey's Congressional delegates and whether the FAA says it will do a live test or not.

"We've been around over a decade demanding ocean routing to bring relief to Elizabeth, Newark and suburban and rural New Jersey. If the airspace redesign should proceed without ocean routing, there will be a second reauthorization of New Jersey," said Pamela Baran-Brown, executive director of the New Jersey Coalition Against Aircraft Noise.

"We're optimistic that members of Congress endorse ocean routing almost unanimously," said Baran-Brown. "My belief is we can all put our faith and trust in the rational, common sense of our congressmen to oversee the FAA as it moves forward to create the safest and quietest routes possible."

The committee last week also approved an amendment to another Franks bill that calls on the U.S. Department of Transportation to develop a new standard for aircraft engines that will further reduce airplane noise. Additionally, the Department of Transportation would be required to issue a report to Congress by March 1, 2000 on the progress made in reaching this goal.

The Aviation Investment and Reform Act for the 21st Century was approved by the Transportation and Infrastructure Committee and will go to the full House for a vote by the spring.

The airport investment and reform act, which will be fully implemented by the end of the year, is already making it substantially more difficult for the level of airplane noise at the airport and across the county's road network.

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

County Teen Arts Festival promotes artistic discipline

By Jacquie McArthur, Associate Editor

In 1969, arts educators put their heads together to find a way to provide arts education in schools. This year, the New Jersey State Teen Arts Festival celebrates its 30th anniversary. A variety of promoting student efforts in every artistic discipline, with Governor Christine Todd Whitman as honorary chairperson, today is the second day of the annual Union County Teen Arts Festival, a celebration of the arts featuring approximately 3,000 students and 50 professional artists participating in student performances and exhibits, as well as professional critiques and workshops at Princeton University's Cranford campus.

The success of 2 years' worth of planning, coordinating and administering is greatly influenced by newly Teen Arts alumni, instrumental to the success of the program. Locally, Teen Arts alumni Kim Leary of the Union County Division of Cultural and Heritage Affairs has coordinated the county program for five years.

According to Leary, the Union County Teen Arts program has been in existence for approximately 20 years.

"Each year we've tried to add a little bit more," Leary said. "We always evaluate the program and get feedback from students, teachers and artists. We try and adjust it year by year to make it a little bit better, and make it more accessible. Artistically like working with the kids and seeing that creative energy. Students have said that, in the critique process, they really like the individual attention, working one-on-one with the artist, getting feedback on what they've done and where to go to have that happen."

Feedback from festival participants has resulted in new workshops and more artists to evaluate, advise and encourage students, especially regarding career options.

"Whether you're going to be in a band for the rest of your life or not, and most people don't," Leary said, "the concepts that go with that can be applied in many different fields of work. The arts, in general, produces creative thinkers. You need people to think on their feet, and people who are in the arts do that. They have management skills and problem-solving skills."

Although over 3,000 students and 50-plus artists are busy for two days every March at the Union County Teen Arts Festival, Leary and other Teen Arts administrators are busy year-round coordinating the festival. "I have for particular job that day but it's a responsibility," Leary said. "They're going and I can't stop them," she laughed. "You have to go with the flow. There's a framework there. For something that size, there's going to be the excellent things, and then there's going to be the things that need a little work."

"The festival starts the cycle of events," Leary explained. "After that, we have the touring exhibit, which goes around from location to location. By next year, we'll have to get those sites and get them set up. Making sure everything is going to fit. Just getting things back from the schools is quite a task," she said.

"Two pieces of artwork from each county exhibit are chosen to take statewide, as well."

"We also have the poetry reading, which happens at Barnes and Noble," in Springfield. The poetry is then published in an anthology, which is coordinated over the summer, according to Leary.

"And then begins the fundraising, a major portion of the year's responsibilities. Fundraising begins in the state level. The State Teen Arts Festival is entirely dependent upon grants and donations. Annually receives a $100,000 grant from the NJ State Department of Education, according to State Teen Arts Executive Director Shirley Sasser. From that grant, $21,000 goes back to the counties, $14,000 per county."

"It's always a struggle to fund events," Sasser said. "We take every dime we get and turn it into programs for kids."

Union County Teen Arts is also grants and donations. With funds primarily channeled toward helping artists for their services on the days of the festival.

Leary said the primary source of funds is Union County through various reasons, which give very generously. "It announces each year they just send us a very large check. Last year, there must have been five or more major donors," Leary said. "I'm hoping that the bond-raising package tells them all they need to know. We're trying to let them know that we're developing their teen arts programs."

marketing materials, and maintains an artist resource directory, consisting of approximately 400 artists available for referral. In addition, the Teen Arts administrators are busy year-round bringing county Teen Arts coordinators together. Leary also organizes pre- and post-festival meetings.

"We invite teachers and artists to come and help us develop and evaluate what we're going to do each year," Leary said.

According to Sasser, State Teen Arts sets the guidelines for the program, but "recognizes the uniqueness of each county."

Each county is organized very differently, she said, planning not all festivals are administered by government facilities, but by individual schools or county colleges. "We want each county to be responsive to their own community."

The State Teen Arts guidelines establish the goals of the program, which are "to help students develop perceptual, intellectual and technical skills; gain cultural awareness and understanding; develop personal aesthetic values; and learn self-discipline, critical thinking and problem solving through analyzing, interpreting and making judgements." The emphasis is on sharing rather than competition.

"The county level gives a lot of the festival," Leary said. "We always have a large volunteer contingent which comes out, which really helps us. We get a lot of support from other county agencies. Police and Fire help us out with physically getting the art panels in and out, loaned by Cranford Board of Education, and setting up the stands," and music stands, loaned by Elizabeth Board of Education. "Union County Sheriff's Office gives us their forensic artist, who does a workshop for us." Allentown Police helps plan to the two-day workshop. "We're very fortunate to have people like Elizabeth, who gives us their stands and chairs, and sets and gossamer. Roselle Board of Education."

April, spanning November through April, coordinating information from the schools.

"It's a big thing to get a school to go to this kind of event," she said. "And it takes a high school facility to accommodate the students and faculty who do participate. Union County College's Cranford campus has provided a suitable space for nearly 15 years."

"It was at Keen College years ago," Leary said. "That was a little difficult because of the different buildings. This is the best site we've had, and it's used by UCC, because the buildings are all together, it's all compact, we can have everything happen all in the same place."

The college donates the campus for the two-day festival.

"They open up their doors to us, and I don't know what we would do without it. Some county festivals have to pay for their sites, and they're really good to us," Leary said.

When she is not working behind the scenes, coordinating Union County's Teen Arts Festival, Leary performs with the dance troupe from New York City. She is also a dance coordinator for the State Teen Arts Festival, which takes place in May at The College of New Jersey in Trenton. Leary's mother started the arts at the Middlesex County Teen Arts Festival.

"I did all different kinds of disciplines of the dance, and I submitted writing, and I went for visual art workshops," Leary said. "And eventually earned employment in the arts, earning a degree from Keen College in public relations communications. Leary also brings painting/graphic art experience to the job."

Leary feels the Teen Arts Festival is a positive experience.

"It's a chance for kids to come and show their creative ability, and to expand if some treatment to exchange ideas. It's just a really good venue for creative thinking," she said.

Other Teen Arts alumni eventer Andy Bernstein, a musician and arts educator from Highland Park, critiques video production on both county and state levels, and has been a public relations and technical coordinator on the state level.

"I've been involved with Teen Arts for the better part of my life," she said. "It was the first time that I had people seriously listening to my music. It gives it a certain legitimacy."

"I'm just amazed at the sophistication of the kids," Bernstein said of this, critiquing experience.

Samuel resident Christopher Kernoff, a musician and arts educator in both Union and Essex counties, is a graduate of the Atlantic County Teen Arts program. He called the program

"a smorgasbord of opportunities, and a positive experience."

Fania Tucker, graduate of Keen College in Summit, said the Union County Teen Arts Festival was the "very first time I showed my work in public," and the first time she considered the possibility that "it could be more than a hobby." Now a visual arts instructor at Mount Seion High School in Clark, she is also Teen Arts coordinator for the high school.

Tucker speaks highly of the professional artists who work with the students.

"Wherever they get these people, they're wonderful," she said.

Sasser and Leary agree with Tucker's assessment.

"When we sit down with people, they're just in awe of what we are able to accomplish," Sasser said.

"General consensus is, they're thrilled to be a part of it, it's really exciting," Leary said. "But, we always can use more, because the more we can give the kids, the better it is."

NJ State Teen Arts has tentative plans for its 30th anniversary gala celebration in the fall.

"I was at Keen College years ago," Leary said. "That was a little difficult because of the different buildings. This is the best site we've had, and it's used by UCC, because the buildings are all together, it's all compact, we can have everything happen all in the same place."

'Two Sisters' walks the line between politics and passion

In 1997, and political change is afoot in the Communist world. The perestroika movement has opened a crack in the seemingly solid wall of Russian Communism, eventually leading to the Soviet Union's eventual collapse. In the western hemisphere, citizens of Cuba watch these events with a mixture of trepidation and hope. What effect will the fall of Communism have on the Cuban island nation, the last bastion of old-time Marxism?

This is the question pondered by the Osipov sisters in the Tony Award-winning MacArthur Theatre on the Square production of "Two Sisters and a Piano," a passionate political drama by Cuban-born playwright version of "Two Sisters and a Piano" was developed in part with support from the Sundance Theatre Laboratory.

A witty and subversive story of personal freedom and political oppression, "Two Sisters and a Piano" tells the story of two women living under the iron fist of a Communist regime. The Communist regime, which she sent to Castro. The sister, writer Maria Celis and pianist Sofia, become embroiled in a dangerous game when a military official takes a personal interest in their case. As the struggle for power grows more intense, the line between politics and passion blurs.

Using their imprisonment to their family's comfortable Havana apartment, the sisters engage in a variety of activities to secure themselves. The younger one, Sofia, plays her beloved piano. "Mataguena" and "Minko" melodies of Louis Moreau Gottschalk, among others, are key notes for her. The living room wall is a newspaper on the man who lives next door, Maria Celis, a 45-year-old widow of a fellow writer, letters to the husband, Antonio, who is in the United States, attempting to find sympathy for their plight among human rights groups and, perhaps, get the women political asylum in Sweden.

When the Cuban authorities intercept her letters and refuse to deliver his, Sofia writes to him in her head, long letters of yearning and enters into a dangerous and possibly compromising arrangement with Lt. Perdomo. Sam has been an eye on the two women since the young man knew what he is a fan of Maria Celis's work and proposes to her. Antonio's letters in return for her sending him a new story she has written. At first, Maria Celis declines his offer, for she senses the danger of getting too close to him; he should be spying on her, only to turn her over to the authorities. Most dangerous of all, she finds herself physically and sexually attracted to the young lieutenant, a situation that would be the most dangerous of all, for by giving herself to him, she is betraying all that she and Sofia have suffered for.

"Two Sisters and a Piano" is a treasure chest of fine acting, directing and set, costume and lighting design. Brian Kirkick has paced the performance so that even when there is more talk than action, there are no dead spots. Joanne Cole is marvellously believable as the paranoid, distrustful Maria Celis. Her torment as the lieutenant leads Antonio's very personal letters is excruciatingly real. As Sofia, Marissa Chibas was equally as fine.

Symphony orchestra continues arts education program

The Symphony orchestra continues its Master Teacher Collaborative program. This program recognizes excellence in teaching by identifying teachers existing their own expanding network and asking them to share their skills by creating instructional lessons and distributing them to other teachers.

The program is supported by the NJSO's Young Artist Ambassadors, who are encouraged to give master classes and conduct with young artists performing with the full NJSO. The 1999 YAA finals, conducted by Lawrence Leighton Smith, will take place on May 15 at 8 p.m. at the NIPAC in Newark. The winner of the auditions will perform with the orchestra during the 1999-2000 season.

Greater Newark Youth Orchestra is an orchestra training program which provides musical training for talented young people in and around Newark. The young players are coached by members of the NJSO. GSYO performs two concerts annually.

NJSO educational programs are supported by Geraldine R. Dodge Foundation, Frank and Lydia Bergen Foundation, Turrell Fund and Victoria

Foundation. For more information on NJSO education programs, contact Judith Hutchison at (973) 624-3773, ext. 215.

NJSO will continue to execute its Reach program. Resources for Education and Community Harmony, during the 1998-99 season. Reach allows NJSO musicians, individually or in small groups, to broaden the impact and service of the symphony in the community in a variety of educational, community service and outreach activities.

Time and comedy are of the essence in Elizabeth

The Elizabeth Playhouse has "No Time for Comedy" through April 4. The title may sound very serious to potential theatergoers, and indeed, the cast is very serious about the entertainment value of this tragicomedy.

The time is 1938, the place, New York City. Successful comedian

Roberta Sleva as Amanda waxes melodramatic about Gaylord, played by Rich Aroni, and his latest literary work, in "No Time for Comedy" at The Elizabeth Playhouse.

Theater View

By Jacquie McCarthy, Associate Editor

address Linda Easterbrook paces restlessly. She'll be penitence, awaiting the return of her eccentric playwright husband who's writing their next star vehicle. There's the bell — but it's the stow Philip Smith, a recent acquaintance, who's captivated by Linda's charm, obliged to inform her that husband Gaylord is not having a long liquid lunch, as she suspects, but is an "act" involved with "Pink's" estranged wife Amanda, who is determined to marry Gaylord. And she does — not creatively — writing a scene, "Play Right" What's a woman to do?

The play turns off the developer appropriate to the era just in time to itself, keeping the action legible.

between screwball comedy and lewd, unwholesome, and, wonderfully, executed with flair by a marvelous cast. The talented Janet Aspinwall is terrific as the sophisticated, glamorous actress who's stuck with her, who wants her to get back as desperately as she wants to get away. Gaylord, Andrew Allen, the regional Philip Smith, who has a star in his eye when he looks at Linda, is Alan's truly funny as cardiac, not acerbic, and Clemens.

Rich Aroni takes hold of the character of Gaylord Easterbrook with both hands. Where a less inspired actor could have walked through this role without much effort, Aroni changes in and communicates a vulnerability that makes the audience believe in him as much as Linda and Amanda, and with some physicality to match. Not to the role, he is talented. Roberta Sleva, haunting and comely, not Amanda. Sleva plays the heroine wryly just over the top, but not as much that you forget that one of her overly dramatic swoops might just take her Gaylord away forever. Her dramatization of the existential angst that is Gaylord's dramatic type is not to be missed. And of course, no 1940s classic romance is complete without a sensual, lusty love, and "Married Love" K. Matlock — lovely — makes the most of every line.

"Photography is well done, paced. Mary Broderick with white glove treatment. Applaudable as usual, thank God! And of these three levels, applying the matter to which they should become accustomed. Performances are balanced, easily playing off one another, a testament to Artful Director Marlow Ferguson.

Thai Cuisine

The restaurant is located across from Union Town Hall at 1975 Morris Ave. For information, call (908) 688-5678.

Are you ready for a new experience? Morris Thai Cuisine certainly has a lot to offer. Open-minded and willing to try new flavors, a lovely luncheon was had by all members of the dining party. The group wanted to try a variety of Thai dishes, and had sampled a buffet of favorites.

The meal began with a variety of appetizers. The spring roll was the number one choice, stuffed with mixed vegetables with a light and flaky crust served with a plum sauce.

The next course consisted of a combination of chicken, Satay, marinated with herbs and served on a skewer with peanut sauce and cucumber salad. The shrimp rolls consisted of fried shrimp stuffed with ground chicken with plum dipping sauce, followed by steamed and fried dumplings. All were most tasty. The flavors were wonderfully blended and not overpowering.

It was apparent that the wait staff was eager to please. As this point, lunch arrived. The group sampled a Morris Thai special, Tamarind duck, which was marinated duck topped with a fruited tamarind sauce. The duck was tender, and moist; the sauce nicely complemented the duck, a must-have at Morris Thai. Next, the group shared an authentic Thai dish called Pad Thai, sautéed rice noodles with shrimp, chicken or vegetable, egg, bean curd, ground peanuts and bean sprouts, truly a sensational dish.

For dessert, the group sampled fried bananas, soft and warm on the inside with a crispy, flaky crust, served with whipped cream, a favorite for anyone. Everyone also tried the pumpkin custard, which was creamy with slices of pumpkin and a caramel syrup drizzled over top.

Morris Thai Cuisine has a non-smoking atmosphere, which is elegant but casual.
