

Educational level as a requirement for jobs rising

WASHINGTON—The 1974 edition of the Occupational Outlook Handbook says that educational requirements will continue to rise for most jobs, including those in clerical and blue-collar fields.

The 842-page handbook, just issued by the U.S. Department of Labor, emphasizes that post-high school training, such as that obtained through apprenticeship and junior or community colleges, will take on increased importance.

The Occupational Outlook Handbook reports employment prospects through the mid-1980s for more than 850 occupations, and 39 major industries. It is a widely used publication in vocational guidance and is an all-time best-seller among government publications.

Among other things, it is designed to give young people up-to-date, accurate vocational information.

In addition to forecasting the need for more education, the new edition reveals that:

- Two out of three openings that will arise through 1985 will stem from the need to replace workers who are retiring, or a third of openings will result from employment growth.
- The number of professional and technical jobs—those usually requiring a college degree—will continue to grow faster than jobs in any other occupational group.
- However, the vast majority of the million job openings expected to become available between 1972 and 1985 will be open to persons who have not completed four years of college.

Natural gas from water hyacinths? Process is termed commercially feasible

A simple natural gas can be inured "forced" through mass production and bacterial digestion of the pesky water hyacinth, algae, sargassum, grass or a variety of other plants, according to a report in Chem Tech, a publication of the American Chemical Society.

Achieving this "perpetual" methane economy "does not require any technological breakthroughs," claimed Dr. Donald J. Klais, chemist and assistant research director at The Institute of Gas Technology in Chicago.

"Part solution to the gas shortage is technically sound, uses known technology, and offers suitable development, will probably be commercially feasible," he said.

Land and water plants selected for their high carbon content are cultivated for conversion to methane. The main constituent of natural gas. Ways to convert carbon-containing waste materials to synthetic natural gas (SNG) have recently been established, said Dr. Klais, and this is just a few steps away from the real thing.

What he means by "real" is that the waste for biomass plant production and gasification would not be degraded, and might even be improved or used in other ways, such as for special applications such as food production or recreation.

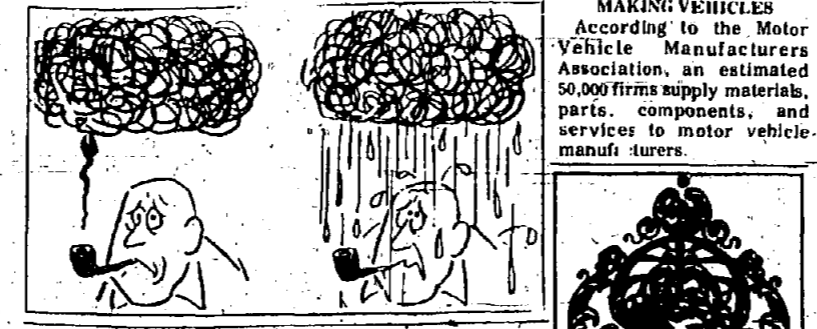

Plants represent the most abundant renewable raw material in the world, Dr. Klais said in the article. It has been estimated that the total carbon produced by plants is about 140 billion tons each year. In principle, a massive supply of organic carbon for conversion to gas.

The first step in the "real" thing is to obtain a sufficient amount of biomass to support the scheme. By balancing the carbon content of the plants with the carbon content of the gas, Dr. Klais noted that little work has been done to increase the carbon content of plants. If more suitable plants can be developed—a sure possibility, he said—the land requirements would drop.

Another factor is that the plants need not be confined to land. In fact, he pointed out that the carbon content in many marine plants is greater than in their land-lucked cousins.

"To summarize," said Dr. Klais, "the careful selection of plant species and growth conditions, it appears that sufficient yields of low-cost, high-quality plants can be developed and produced to provide a nonfossil, renewable carbon feed for conversion to SNG."

Which leads to the next problem: Converting

Flower sales up in Jersey

The gross wholesale value of sales by commercial producers of New Jersey flowers—carnations, chrysanthemums, gladioli, and roses—rose 16 percent in 1972, according to Secretary of Agriculture Phillip Alampi.

The 1972 value was $6,435,000, compared with $5,555,000 in 1971.

The net value of sales of foliage plants for indoor or patio use rose 25 percent. The 1972 value was $1,681,000, compared with $1,342,000 in 1971.

The preliminary calculations indicate that there are substantial technical and economic incentives to develop nonfossil carbon technology, Dr. Klais concluded.

Meeting Monday to focus on future of senior housing

The Township Committee and Springfield Senior Citizen Housing Committee (SCHC) will hold a joint open meeting Monday at 4 p.m. at the Florence Gaudinier School to discuss what can be done to speed construction of middle-income apartments for elderly local residents.

Speakers for both bodies stressed that emphasis will be on what can be done in the future, rather than on "reclamations" and discussion of reasons for delays in the past.

An SCHC spokesman gave the following capsule history of efforts to achieve senior citizen housing:

The SCHC was formed by the Township Committee in 1971. In March 1972, it approved as a site for the project the Township-owned Leone tract, running approximately from Mountain Avenue to S. Springfield Avenue, just north of Bully Street. The state gave preliminary approval for the project on May 31, 1972. In November 1972, the Township Committee approved a zoning ordinance permitting construction of this type of housing on the Leone tract.

In January 1973, however, President Nixon changed a freeze on all Title 238 housing funds for 18 months as part of his program to control inflation. This 18-month freeze will end in June, and there has been no indication whether it will be extended at that time or whether any funds will be made available.

Estimated total cost of the project, on land already owned by the township, was $4 million at price levels of November 1972. The plans call for construction of 160 apartments on the four-acre Leone tract.

The project would take approximately 18 months to build, from whenever funds are made available. The SCHC has rough plans for the apartments but it cannot go beyond this point without "seed money" for architectural

Time out taken by students at Regional High

Students at Jonathan Dayton Regional High School in Springfield walked out of the school's front lawn for an hour on Monday in protest against a proposed school board plan to change the school's curriculum. The walkout, or more properly a stay-out, followed a 10-minute assembly in which the school board announced its plan to change the curriculum.

The students refused to return to their classes for approximately an hour.

An anonymous telephone call to this newspaper described the action as a protest against the attendance rules but the school board said that student leaders had assured him that the walkout had not been planned in advance. There were no signs displayed and no other indication that the incident had been scheduled ahead of time.

Despite efforts to reach student leaders later in the day, this newspaper could obtain no comment. Andy Mendelsohn, senior class president, and Phil Zimm, head of the Student Council, had voiced student protests over several Regional Board of Education policies at a board meeting attended by more than 300 students April 2 at Dayton.

The students had called for open lunch and study period rules, permitting students to leave school grounds when not in class, and for a designated smoking area within or outside the school. They had also objected to the new attendance policies, which permit teachers and administrators to give a student a zero grade if

Public Library will present Armour lecture on May 15

The Friends of the Springfield Public Library this week invited the public to attend a free lecture Wednesday, May 15 at 7 p.m., by Lawrence A. Armour, a Springfield resident and author of "The Young Millionaire" (Playboy Press), published last August. The book is a series of profiles examining the careers of 25 men who accumulated $1 million dollars or more by the age of 30.

Armour, a news editor at Barron's Weekly, has been a resident of Springfield since 1969 and has been involved in the town's Little League baseball and basketball programs. He was one of the founders of the Springfield Public Library, and he has served as chairman of the Temple Sha'aray Shalom social action committee.

During the year which he spent preparing the book, Armour found out that "there's no one secret to success." The men he interviewed came from different backgrounds and are engaged in a wide variety of pursuits. "But they all have something in common," he said, "and they are willing to work around the clock and to risk everything to make their ideas work," he said.

Armour says he "loved" writing the book. "Everyone is fascinated by rags-to-riches success stories, and I'm no exception."

According to $50 million worth of net worth in the book, Nick Mitzi, president of the NBA Cleveland Cavaliers. "The significant thing about the book is that it's about people who make things happen. They are action-oriented. They are doers. That makes them exciting and makes the book hard to put down."

Local residents can find out more by attending Armour's lecture at the Springfield Public Library, according to a library spokesman.

DAYTON DISPATCH

By Margo Krasnow
sophomore Ann Wundertich and freshman Lauren Eick, Pam Hamilton, Nancy Janukowicz, Kathy Kelly, Liz Knodel, Jean Miele, Ruth Partridge, Dina Sorge, Dina Toubser, Karen Wadler, Laura Wentz and Karen Wright. If girls participate on a team which Dayton is challenging, then Dayton's girls usually compete against the other girls. If the other team does not include girls, then Dayton girls will run against boys or race among themselves. Practicing 12 hours each week, as the boys do, these girls also divide their time among warmups (usually 20 minutes of exercises), endurance (mile walks, interval jog, run hard, jog) and sprint (sprint work). "The practices are really hard and I am very tired after, but they are a lot of fun," Coach Jones said and had his objective is for girls to enjoy the sport and to stay with it. When asked about the enjoyable part of track, Gail Lawrence said, "The reactions are a lot of fun. People who see us run say, 'My God, it is a gift!'"

Tenant's complaint resolved by board

The Springfield Rent Leveling Board last week was able to resolve a tenant-landlord dispute by allocating the tenant to another apartment in the same complex. The following is a report by a spokesman for the Springfield Tenant's Association on its decision:

"Before a large gathering of tenants, the Springfield Rent Leveling Board convened last week to hold a hearing regarding a complaint about a notice of eviction by a landlord of an 82-year-old woman tenant who has lived in her apartment for eight years."

"The landlord, who is a physician, claimed he wanted her apartment for his office and personal use. This was the second time an effort was made to evict tenants from their apartments at 44 Morris Ave., Springfield. The board decided the eviction notices the first time."

"Representing the tenants were Jack Resnik, president of the Springfield Tenants Association and Joseph Bruder, vice president. Results opposed the eviction with claims that the landlord's interference on the landlord's part and that the landlord was not a tenant who has lived in her apartment for eight years."

"The closing meetings of the Junior High Fellowship (grades 6-8) of the Springfield Presbyterian Church will be held today from 5 to 7 p.m. in the Presbyterian Parish House, 27 Church Mall. A picnic supper is planned. An evaluation of this past year's program and format will be made to help in planning for next year's activities."

"The following is a meeting notice for Thursday, October for girls: super-music study and work projects under the leadership of Sheila Kobourner, director of Christian education at the local church, and Ruth Wogl, a church school teacher who recently joined the Covenant Players, a touring religious dramatic group. Dr. Bruce Evans, pastor, led the study period for the confirmation class at the 10th white meetings."

"Mrs. Harvey Schramm has coordinated the preparation and serving of the supper with help from mothers of the young people in the fellowship. The group will convene its activities in the fall."

Editorial comment SCHOOL ISSUES

Perhaps the most important question of the day, at least for several hundred students at Jonathan Dayton Regional High School...

The major goals sought by the parents are an open lunch, to permit them to leave the school grounds during the noon hour...

The latter provide authority for teachers and administrators to give a zero grade for a student after five unexcused absences or eight excused but nonmedical absences...

We anticipate that the school board will provide some answers at its monthly meeting next Tuesday night at Arthur L. Johnson Regional High School in Clark.

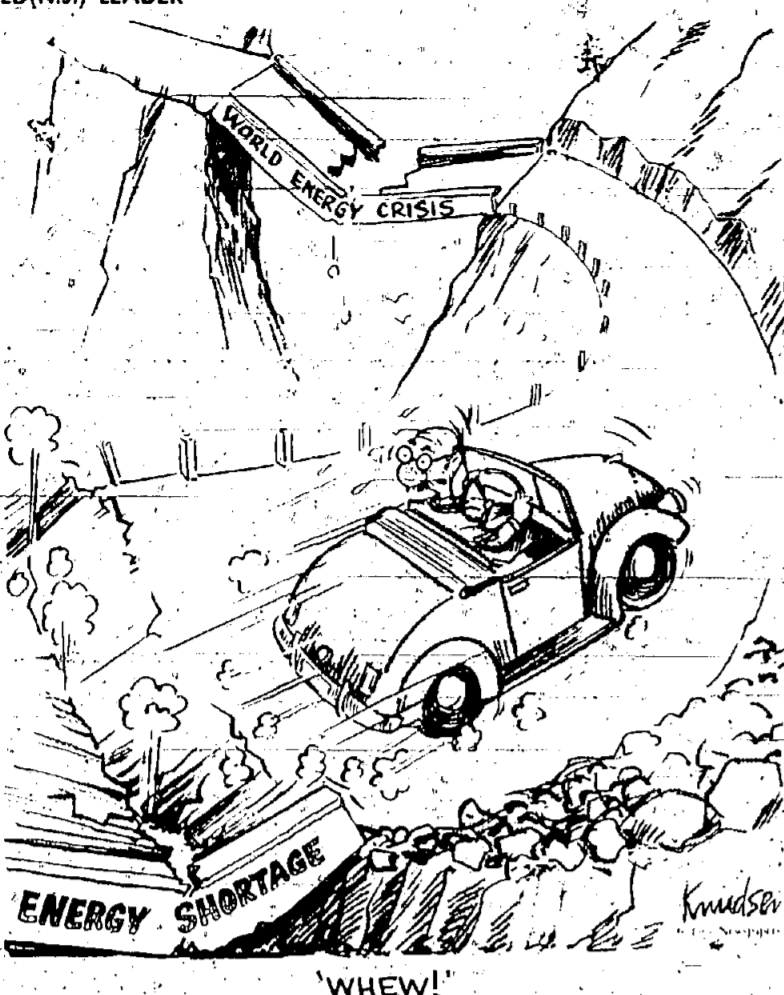

For one part, we feel that there is merit, to varying degrees, in the student requests. An open lunch would seem worth a try.

We believe that young adults of high school age must make their own decisions on this matter, with advice from their parents.

We believe that a designated outdoor smoking area, perhaps with enforcement of cleanup responsibility in the hands of the Student Council...

At the same time, some of the present wording seems unduly punitive. Changes could help to emphasize that education is a cooperative process...

As for smoking, we believe that the proposal has substantial merit. We agree that cigarettes are harmful, as the board has stated most emphatically several times.

There is still more to do. And there are decisions which students will not like and on which they should not be consulted.

Three-month total of pollution fines put at $87,650

Air pollution, water pollution and solid waste disposal violations brought a total of $87,650 in collected penalties for the first three months of the year, according to the state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP).

Air pollution penalties totalled $73,900 collected through March 31. Solid waste enforcement actions resulted in $10,700 in penalties collected, while water pollution violations accounted for $2,650 in fines.

For the first three months, said Leonard, 89 orders were issued for violations of the air pollution codes compared with 144 for the same period last year, and 44 administrative penalties assessed compared with a previous three-month high of 33.

Leonard also noted that 33 permits were tested as to emissions compared with 17 for the same three-month period last year. Installation of pollution control apparatus will result in the removal of nearly 50,000 tons per year of particulate matter compared with 30,000 tons for the same period last year.

Also in the first quarter, air pollution control referred 21 cases to the office of the Attorney General for action. In the case of water pollution violations, seven cases were referred to the AG's office while the Bureau of Solid Waste Management referred two cases for action.

DEP also noted that of 39 court cases handled, air pollution produced 14 court orders against violators. Water pollution had six cases in court (four of them consent judgments), while one court case was in a solid waste violation.

DEP noted that enforcement activities of the State's Bureau of Air Pollution Control have been rated as outstanding by the U.S. General Accounting Office.

Realtors, Rutgers cooperate in plan to curb foreclosures

A step in a program designed to help prevent foreclosures on homes owned by low- and moderate-income families has been announced by the New Jersey Association of Realtors (NJAR). A 10,000-member organization representing Realtors throughout New Jersey.

Slaney H. Kooser of Jersey City, president of the state association, announced that efforts are under way to develop an educational program in cooperation with Rutgers University Extension Division. The project thus far involves a limited number of HUD-approved voluntary and municipal agencies providing home ownership counseling services in Paterson, Plainfield and Somerset.

Kooser said: "Through the efforts of NJAR's Urban Task Force, a selected number of employees of these voluntary agencies have been enrolled in a 12-week real estate course at Rutgers. Upon completion it will be determined if the program of study has improved the employees' ability to help counsel families who are in danger of losing their homes to foreclosures.

The voluntary agencies presently participating in the program are the Paterson Task Force; the Home Ownership Counseling and Referral Services of Paterson; the City Relocation Office of Plainfield; and the Somerset County Housing Association of Somerset.

These agencies as well as others expected to eventually participate in the program have been designated as approved home ownership counseling agencies by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD).

Kooser said: "In many cases it's possible to prevent foreclosure if the family facing such action is given counseling by an individual trained in this area. Our goal is to develop a training program for voluntary agency staffs so as to enhance their knowledge of real estate matters involving foreclosures. Generally, the family facing the loss of its home will turn first for help to a social service agency in the community and through this program such help now will be available."
