

He makes a bee line to danger

When they swarm, police call Oberle

By KAREN SAUTYK
It was General Oberle to the rescue again last week, this time in Jersey City.

Oberle, of Indiana street, Union, is a professional beekeeper, and police departments throughout northern New Jersey have learned to call upon him when a problem with bees has arisen in their communities. On May 2, the Jersey City Emergency Squad summoned him to that Hudson County municipality where a colony of approximately 40,000 of the insects had produced a near-panic situation.

Someone had shaken a tree where a nest was located, and the colony retreated into the street, landing on the fire of a parked car. "When I got there, there were three ambulances, two emergency squads, a fire truck, paramedics and about 50 policemen. There also were about 500 onlookers, and a lot of the people were scared. The movie 'Killer Bees' had been on television the night before, and somebody said that these were that kind of bees," Oberle recalled.

Neither Oberle nor his assistant, 20-year-old Barbara Lever of Linden, had any special gear with them, so they gathered the bees with their hands.

"When Barbara scooped up the first handful from the tree, a couple of people panicked," Oberle said. "I used a broom to sweep the remainder into a pile, and then dumped them in a basket and drove them home in his stuff."

The Jersey City bees have now taken up residence in a barrel on the roof of the Union County Extension Service building in Westfield, where Oberle teaches a 4-1/2 course in beekeeping and varroa-gardening.

Oberle, 55, began beekeeping as a hobby when he was 19 and now maintains hives both at his home and at a friend's farm in Morris County. How many does he own? "You couldn't even count them with a calculator," he laughed. "There are approximately 10,000 in each colony, and I have five colonies at home." The 50,000-estimate from last week's rescue was made by weight. "There are about 10,000 bees to the pound, and we brought back six pounds," he explained.

Oberle said he has often been stung by his "pets" but he has no allergic reaction and no fear. Many times, he uses no protective gear when handling the insects. "I don't get it at all times, when I can sense I'll need it. By now, I know their habits and how they're going to react."

But Oberle has dealt with potentially dangerous situations. He recalled an incident several years ago in Livingston, when a colony of yellow jackets had taken to their way through the wall of a home one night. Attracted by a light-bulb in a bedroom, they swarmed all over a sleeping teenage "lover," but from head to foot.

"Luckily," Oberle said, "the girl's mother did not panic and did not awaken her," but instead called the police, who notified Oberle. All the lights in the home were put out, giving most of the insects the opportunity to fly off. Then Oberle and a police officer awakened the girl, and the beekeeper got the remaining yellow-jackets off her. A doctor examined her, but she had not been stung.

However, after the police and the doctor had left, the girl's mother spotted one yellow-jacket on a window. She tried to hit it and it stung her in the forehead, sending her almost immediately into a coma. "I didn't even have time to call an ambulance," Oberle said. "The doctor told me if we had arrived 10 minutes later, she would have died."

Oberle is careful to make the distinction between the carnivorous yellow-jackets and the honey bees he raises. "Our economy could not survive without honey bees," he said. "If you are not allergic to bee stings, beekeeping is a wonderful hobby. You have something to do, you have to do it check the hives about twice a month." He Union-County beekeeping course is aimed at all ages and all skill levels.

For persons who fear the insects, Oberle's advice is simply "don't panic." When you become frightened and jump around, the adrenalin starts flowing and the bees can sense your fear. If one flies in your ear, stop, be quiet. You could use a piece of paper to squeeze it against the windshield. "The best immediate treatment for a sting, provided there is no allergic reaction, is to apply water, which neutralizes the venom, he said.

Last week's emergency call to Jersey City was a return visit for Oberle. Two weeks earlier he was called by the FBI to the postal complex here, where a nest of honey bees had been stung through the mail. "At that time some of them escaped, so I had to make another trailer-load of honey bees was on its way.

For Oberle, it's a hobby of a way to make a living.

Health board, Cancer Society conduct screening; 140 turn out

A screening program for cancer of the colon and rectum was held in Springfield on May 30, with Theodore Gaska of the township Fire Department serving as grand marshal. Starting time is 8:45 a.m.

Memorial services at the parade will include an invocation by the Rev. Edward Oehling and a speech by Mayor Joanne Rappelli.

Dr. Henry Birne, regional health officer, stated: "Colorectal cancer is the second most common malignancy in men and women. The disease is topped only by skin cancer in frequency and by lung cancer in mortality. It accounts for 24 percent of deaths from all causes in the United States.

"This is the first public program of its type in Union County.

"Mass screening for colorectal cancer is relatively new because the test has been simplified. With early diagnosis the cure rate of 40 percent can be improved to about 90 percent.

"Hidden blood in the stool is rather not necessary to indicate colorectal cancer. However if the cancer is present it can spread long before obvious hemorrhaging may occur.

"At the testing a physician performed a digital rectal examination on each participant. A sample of the stool was placed on a slide, especially prepared to detect even small quantities of blood. A kit of slides was then given to each participant to take home, to prepare and return to the Regional Health Department for analysis.

"Each individual who participated will be notified in a confidential manner of his own results. The follow-up use of the blood detecting slide kit is important since early tumors tend to bleed only intermittently. We expect that patients who have colorectal cancer would demonstrate blood in at least one of three stool specimens.

"The tests are simple and available. Take advantage of them. The remaining screening session is to be held at the township on May 31, at the American Red Cross, Summit Chapter, 956 Springfield Ave., Summit."

Senior citizens protest funding of outdoor trip

The Springfield Board of Education spent most of its three-hour meeting Monday night at the Raymond Chisholm School listening to audience comments on two issues which were not on the formal agenda for action.

One was the vote two weeks ago to fund the "People to People" weekend outdoor living program for eighth graders at the Florence Gaudinier School. An injunction issued by the state education commissioner has barred the board from having the trip financed in large measure by parents of the youngsters participating. Faced with the choice of paying the costs or dropping the trip, the board had voted to pay some $8,000 in costs borne by the parents for the past 15 years. Senior citizens and others in the audience of about 100 people on Monday strongly opposed the expenditure; others defended the program.

The other major topic of discussion was the request by Congregation Israel of Springfield for use of school facilities for the next four or five months while the Orthodox Jewish synagogue constructs its new building. The synagogue has asked to pay the standard school rental fee for use of the Chisholm gym and several classrooms at the Gaudinier School for Sabbath services, daily morning and evening services and for regular school activities, all before or after regular school hours.

The problem has been complicated by a 1976 court decision which stopped the East Brunswick school district from continuing its long-term rental of facilities to two churches and a temple at reduced rates.

Synagogue spokesmen Monday stressed that their request was not for a long-term use of the facilities, and at standard rates.

After a closed session to confer with its attorneys, A. Howard Capozzi, the local rabbi, said he would continue to fight the case.

Music and dances are as ingrained as art in Columbian life. Dance rhythms vary as customs around the country. Melodious African-style tunes and mercurious on the North coast are part of the Caribbean tradition. In the Andes to the South, music descends from the airs of the Incas, but the "to" has a Colombian quality, flavored by a Spanish spice. Most popular of all Afro-Columbian music, and danced to in Colombia, is the cumbia. This—how long has it been since you have had a little rhythm in your life?

Obstetric study to evaluate, aid high-risk cases

In order to evaluate and improve the outcome of high-risk pregnancies, a one-day outpatient program has been established at Elizabeth General Hospital, according to Elizabeth General Hospital, president of the hospital.

Patients who are evaluated through the high-risk program are referred to the hospital by their private physician. The program is under the medical supervision of Laurence M. Scheininger, M.D., assistant director of the residency program in obstetrics and gynecology at Elizabeth General.

The establishment of the high-risk obstetric evaluation program is a cooperative effort to develop and provide a comprehensive range of services for obstetric patients in this area.

The availability of a high-risk obstetric program is a recent development that has made childbirth considerably safer, added Dr. Scheininger.

Community Companions train mental health aides

The Community Companion Program, whose volunteers assist persons recovering from mental disorders, is accepting applications for its first volunteer training program, to be held the first two weeks in July. Community Companion aides work on a person-to-person basis with individual clients who are trying to adjust to non-institutional living, attending every day needs in such a way as to develop individual confidence, self-reliance, independence and knowledge that allows for more effective and functional living.

Volunteers will become involved with all aspects of a client's life, including social and recreational activities, as well as providing clients with information concerning appropriate health services, housing, social, educational and vocational resources within the community.

The Community Companion Program, which operates in Union, Atlantic, Hudson, Morris and Passaic Counties, was developed and is being implemented by the Mental Health Association in New Jersey. Initial funding is from the State Department of Human Services. Office of Community Affairs.

For more information, readers may contact Edmund Murphy or Carol Florek, Union County staff, at 289-0909 or write to Community Companion Program, 615 North Broad St., Elizabeth, 07208.

Some people go to great lengths just to buy one of our homes.

It really happened! When we opened new sections at Rossmore and Clearbrook, many people wanted to buy one of our homes. So she drove over the night before and slept in her car. Just to be among the first in line the next morning.

When you think that's extreme, consider the gentleman who flew in from Michigan the night before, arrived at our sales office from door at 3:00 A.M. with a folding chair and planned himself there so he could be first in line.

When our sales office opened at 8:30 A.M. the next morning, 46 additional people had already queued up so they could be among the first. Faced with the question of who was really first, we finally resorted to handing out numbers!

In that one weekend, over 200 people visited our models. And we sold 31 homes.

Word sounds, madness key to British humor

By DON FREEMAN

Students of humor for years have attempted to analyze the difference between what makes the English laugh and what wrenches laughter from the rest of us over here in the colonies. Dudley Moore, an English comic, suggests that to England the approach is more verbal and, perhaps more important, more usually works in tandem with his partner, Peter Cook, and their two main shows—"Beyond the Fringe" for example—have been successful on both sides of the pond.

The English are, of course, extremely possessive about their brand of humor. About 15 years ago James Thurber, an American humorist ranked may be a notch below Mark Twain, visited London with a show based on his work called "The Thurber Carnival."

The English loved the show and they loved Thurber, with only one reservation: from some critics there were angry rumblings that Thurber wasn't English, one of their own.

But then, the best of humor is as difficult to pin down as mercury. It is varied and intangible and in addition to Thurber, those words suggest Peter Sellers and Beatrice Lillie and Robert Morley and the comedies of Alec Guinness. No analysis of humor, from Henri Bergson to Max Eastman to Steve Allen, could ever zero in with any accuracy on just why these comedy players from England fill us with laughter.

"I suspect our approach to humor is rather a bit freer than the American," said Dudley Moore. "We have a more preoccupation with the sound of words as a jumping-off point for certain types of humor. For want of a better word, mad. And the madhouse, as you know, Monty Python, is pitilessly visual."

Although this particular essence has been reflective of English humor for many years, it blossomed in the 1950s. Peter Sellers, for one, came out of the Goon group.

"For a time," says Dudley Moore, "everybody in the United Kingdom was doing Goon imitations, which is to say they were doing mad, visual things.

Curiously enough, the brains behind this whole trend in English humor was an Australian, who was called "The Goon Show."

"Humor, you know, is a slightly based on a hostility which means irreverence, even if it's beyond the pale of what you first think of as being 'fun,'" Peter Cook said and picked him at a recent dinner.

Contrary to all advice points out, the comedy of jokes, one-liners, is foreign to most of the English humorists. The wit of John Galsworthy, for example, is very good and it was not particularly good at the humor of putting down oneself. We loved Jack Benny but we never had a Jack Benny who was funny in the Benny style."

10 percent rise in medical care prices reported

Medical care prices in the New York-Northeast New Jersey area rose sharply by 10.2 percent between December 1975 and December 1976, according to Herbert Blonstock, regional commissioner, U.S. Department of Labor's Bureau of Labor Statistics. Increases in medical care, which accounted for only 6.4 percent of the entire market basket of goods and services in the area, Consumer Price Index at the end of 1976, represented 14.7 percent of all items over-the-year index rise. Blonstock said that among the components of the medical care index, the sharpest increase was for hospital care; semi-private room charges rose 18.2 percent over the year. Doctor's fees rose 8.1 percent, physician's fees 7.1 percent and drugs and prescriptions 4.9 percent between December 1975 and December 1976. In a longer term review, Blonstock noted that the sharpest increases were for hospital care, with semi-private room charges up 86.5 percent between December 1970 and December 1976. The rise in hospital charges was more than double the 46.8 percent rise for the overall Consumer Price Index; a 6.1 percent increase was noted for the entire medical care component.

McGuire Air Force Base will hold its annual open house and air show on Memorial Day, May 30, from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. There will be dozens of airplanes on hand for public inspection, a variety of indoor displays and activities. The air show, which starts at 1 p.m. Admission is free. The aircraft assembled for the occasion include the world's largest, the giant C-5 Galaxy, which stretches almost the length of a football field and stands as high as a six-story building—and some of the smallest experimental aircraft. Indoor displays will feature space equipment shipped to McGuire for this event by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. The air show will include a performance by the United States Army's free fall parachute demonstration team, the Golden Knights, and the Air Force's Thunderbirds, precision aerial demonstration team.

Ban on benefits noted by Horn

John J. Horn, commissioner of the New Jersey Department of Labor and Industry, said federal legislation enacted last October provides that nonprofessional school employees shall not receive supplemental unemployment benefits during a summer recess. The "term reasonable assurance" means a written, verbal or implied agreement that such individual will return to his job at the conclusion of the summer recess, or in the second of such academic years or terms. Commissioner Horn said.
