Speaking to the board, James J. Cline, county superintendent, stated that monitoring by the county office and other departmental staff shows several areas for which the district has been commended. They are the variety of curriculum offerings and the flexibility of scheduling; the extensive services to classified handicapped students within the district; the well-

Radars beats the rap; judge affirms safety

A Springfield policeman has had more luck than other New Jersey motorists in challenging the K-36 radar set, which is widely used to detect speeders throughout the state.

A Municipal Court judge has dismissed the case filed by Patrolman Jeff Vreeland, who ticketed his boss—the Township of Springfield, an opponent of the County of Mercer. Vreeland is requesting him to use the K-36.

Vreeland claimed the portable K-36, when positioned on the dashboard, obstructs the driver's view and turns a

Heritage Day planners plan to hold encore

Springfield's International Heritage Day Festival, which drew a crowd of 6,000 in 1978, will be staged again in 1980, according to Terry Strauss, coordinator. She said an organizational meeting will be held at 8 p.m. Tuesday in the Municipal Building.

"Anyone interested in helping with the festival should come to this meeting on contact me: (879-9118) for information," Strauss said.

She said the festival will be held June 29, 1980, in conjunction with the celebration of the 200th anniversary of the Battle of Springfield.

Festival organizers are again seeking the help of modern immigrants and descendants of earlier immigrants from all the nations and ethnic groups represented in Springfield's population, according to Strauss. Last year the groups operated food and crafts booths and presented festival shows featuring traditional music and dances of more than a dozen nations.

"The festival was so popular last year that we received about 100 calls from people wondering why we had it only once," Strauss said. "So we decided to do it again in conjunction with the battle of Springfield celebration."

Prince Farm builders drop Hillside ave. link

By HELEN HEYNOLDS

A preliminary subdivision plan for Prince Farm will be redesigned to eliminate a proposed strip of street that would have linked Hillside Avenue with the development, which will contain about 80 single-family homes, and with the already existing New Brook Estates tract.

Max Sherman, attorney for developer Frank Racioppi, promised Tuesday that the road layout of the subdivision, to be called Princess Estates, will be redesigned in conformance with recommendations from a traffic consultant retained by the New Brook Estates Land Owners Association.

More than 70 members of the association have been attending recent meetings of the Springfield Planning Board to raise objections about the impact of Princess Estates upon existing homes on New Brook Lane, Laying Terrace and Kemp Drive.

The objectors' traffic consultant, engineer Paul Weckesser, argued Tuesday that through traffic to or from Hillside Avenue would "erode the true residential character" of both the proposed development and of New Brook Estates.

John Stefan, design engineer for the developer, and Sherman said problems cited by Weckesser would all be resolved by the redesign, which they immediately introduced in sketch form.

The sketch shows access to and from Princess Estates only via S. Springfield Avenue, New Brook Lane, now a dead-end street with a small turnaround area, would be extended from New Brook Estates into the new development and completed with a full-size turnaround. A new street, called "proposed road A" in testimony, would be built between S. Springfield and the New Brook extension.

Weckesser, after looking at the

Hardly anyone bothers to vote

Only 628 voters, fewer than 5 percent of the 9,347 who were registered, turned out in Springfield Tuesday for a bi-annual primary election without any municipal contests.

While 84.4 percent of the registered voters stayed home, 278 Republicans and 251 Democrats turned out to endorse their candidates for two seats on the Township Committee and to reflect area-wide trends for county freeloader seats and for District 22 state legislative nominations.

On the Democratic side:

Incumbents Nathan Stokes, with 217 votes, and Robert Wetzchek, 215, were unopposed for nominations for their seats on the Township Committee. Democratic organization candidates for freeloader—Everett C. Latimore, receiving 183 votes in Springfield; Thomas V. Long, 177, and Harold Seymour Jr., 175—squashed the insurgents, as they did countywide. The voting for the Democratic freeloader insurgents in Springfield was 26 for Henry Kielbasa, 23 for Francis Kelly and 26 for Sylvan Zipp.

In District 22, Joanne Rajoppi of Springfield got 231 votes in her hometown for a State Senate nomination, while her Assembly

Housing unit interviewing

Interviews of prospective tenants are continuing, and mid-July remains the target date for occupancy of the first state-federally aided housing development in town, according to Beatrice Elstein, president of the Springfield Senior Citizens Housing Corporation.

Elstein said Sidney Kooser, rental agent for the nonprofit corporation, and his assistant are conducting the interviews. She said the corporation intends to advise all applicants, either in person or by letter, about the outcome of their requests for tenancy in the 157-unit apartment project.

"All will be advised, one way or the other, about their applications," Elstein said. "If they have heard nothing yet, it doesn't mean they are out."

The State We're In

N.J. Conservation Foundation

Here in New Jersey we are far enough south to have a good potential for using various forms of solar heating, and far enough north to make practical home heating essential.

I was reminded of this the other day when I received my weekly copy of one of the best sociological publications in the world, the Maine Times, which reports the news of its state but also digs deeply into the elemental aspects which bear heavily on all our lifestyles. Things like energy and environment.

Remembering that the Maine Times concentrates on matters in and about Maine, I was thus fascinated to see in a special edition titled "Shelter in Maine" about what's going on up there regarding the design and practical use of energy-saving houses.

Inasmuch as Maine is a lot colder than New Jersey, what works up there should work even better here. So why isn't more being done to save energy and, incidentally, make living cheaper in New Jersey?

Hopefully, as Maine goes, so go the rest of us. At least in terms of the innovative housing ideas featured in the Maine Times issue of May 18.

Three basic energy-saving houses are described. None represents any serious change in lifestyle. One is a so-called "high technology" solar house using pumped styrofoam beads as insulation for a solar panel. The beads are pumped into storage during the day and are pumped into the solar panel at night to prevent heat loss through the solar hot air collector.

Supplemental heat is supplied by a Russian stove, a wood or coal-fired cross between a stove and a fireplace which uses a lot of masonry to retain and radiate heat. Fine pipes in the masonry extract every usable bit of heat.

A second house is partially underground, with three walls buried in hillside. The fourth wall is all window and faces south to garner all the solar heat available. Even in a cold part of Maine, the temperature inside that house never falls below 40 degrees Fahrenheit in the winter when no heat is being added. The secret, of course, is the insulation provided by the earth around three walls.

The third is an "envelope house." That literally means one house inside of another, of which is heated by a transparent south outer wall and circulates elsewhere by convection. Summer cooling is provided by air flowing beneath the floor, in the basement.

Again, a Russian stove (replaced by a wood or coal stove) provides extra heat and heat water. All three designs are simple and merely utilize sunlight and basic physical conditions which are available to all of us. Better yet, all three are merely modifications of contemporary designs. Their interiors are no different from those of other houses, except for windows "near" the partially underground house. Ample insulation is important to each design.

It's a fact that no home built from now on should be without passive solar features and ample insulation. The same goes for commercial or industrial structures. That step alone would save millions of gallons of oil.

What could be simpler? Extra costs will be more than offset quickly by savings over the present and future inflated prices of fuel oil or gas. All it will take is a new breed of architect and a mortgage and loan industry which recognizes the value of energy-saving systems.

What's good in Maine can be better in New Jersey!

Montclair man fined for dumping refuse

A Montclair man has been fined $50 for dumping refuse on a vacant property at the end of Treetop drive. Springfield Municipal Judge Malcolm Bohrod ordered Hugh F. Darrago to pay the fine after he was caught by Patrolman William Sedlak.

In other cases Monday night, Judge Bohrod ordered fines and court costs to be paid by:

New children's books

By PATRICIA J. FENNIMORE
The Springfield Public Library lists the following titles among the recently received books in the children's department.

"The House of Five Bears," by Cynthia Jantesson
This is an adaptation of a Russian folktale simplified for beginning readers. It is the story of a farmer and his wife who leave their house during a blizzard. They follow a tunnel until they find an empty house, where there is a cozy fireplace and warm food on the table. The title of the book tells whose house it is.

Ages 5-7
"Jewish Holidays," by Margery Cuyler
This book explores the meaning of each Hebrew holiday, explaining customs and describing the special foods that are eaten. There is a glossary of terms related to the holidays, along with craft ideas and charming illustrations to further enhance the explanations.

Ages 6-10
"Playground Sports-A Book of Ball Games," by Marilyn Good
The spirit of playing games is captured in this how-to book. Skills are demonstrated and included as well as rules and terms used in playing various ball games.

Ages 7-10
"Fair Annie of Old Mole Hollow," by Beverly Courtney Crook
A touch of love is found in this story of 1978 expenditures. Largest budget increase over 1978 spending occurred in Mountainside ($5.2 million), Camden ($4.5 million), Gloucester (2.9 million) and Bergen ($2.8 million) counties.

Reduction of non-property tax revenue such as federal aid, can be responsible for cutbacks in county spending, while limits on property tax increases prevent spending authorizations from rising to completely fill the gap caused by decrease in non-property tax revenues, points out NJTA.

In Union County, the adopted 1979 budget of $88,306,456 compares with 1978 expenditures of $94,645,884, an increase of 8.92 percent (0.8 percent). Essex County's adopted 1979 budget of $209,815,784 is a decrease of 2.9 percent ($6,383,226) from 1978 expenditures of $216,199,010.

PRIME TIME

Pilots fighting age rule

By Cy Brickfield
When Congress amended the Age Discrimination in Employment Act in 1978 and set the mandatory retirement age for 70 for most workers in private industry and to eliminate it entirely for almost all federal workers, the ADEA's protection was not extended to workers holding jobs in which age is a legitimate occupational qualification.

In general, the thinking behind this exemption was that there are certain kinds of work in which physical endurance is essential for the safety of both the public and the individual worker. More specifically, this intentional lapse in the law's coverage means that police and fire personnel, and airline pilots, can be forced into retirement far earlier than their contemporaries in other occupations. There has been little protest thus far from police and fire people who, after risking their lives daily, are usually retired before they reach middle age.

During World War II, I served in the Corps (as it was called then) so I know what it's like to pilot a plane under great pressure. These days, I do a great deal of flying as a passenger, so I would be more than a little worried if there was a good chance that the cockpit crew might suffer a heart attack or some other sudden incapacitation while the flight is in progress. As the same time, however, I am well aware that the crew includes a copilot and a flight engineer, both of whom are capable of taking over the controls in the event of an emergency. As far as I know, neither heart attack nor stroke is particularly contagious; thus, if one member of the cockpit crew were to fall ill, the chances of the other two members being incapacitated is very slight. Medical mishaps have occurred in the past, but they probably continue to occur in the future, but they have generally been due to food poisoning and allergic reactions, and have not endangered the plane's passengers.

Congressman Rinaldo

The loss of more than 50,000 lives on the nation's highways "last year" represented the highest number of traffic deaths since 1948, thus signaling a reversal in the downward trend of auto fatalities that resulted from the 55-mile-per-hour speed limit.

Kevin J. Murphy, president of Continental Trailways, recently asked the federal government to require 55-mile per hour governors on all interstate commercial vehicles. The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration is currently seeking public comment on the proposed rule. It would have a two-fold effect: saving lives and reducing gasoline consumption by an estimated 500,000 barrels a day. But there appears to be little enthusiasm for the rule among the governors that prevent a car or truck from going faster than 55.

Other steps may prove to be just as important as changing the speed limit. The gas allocation for states that refuse to enforce the speed limit and stronger penalties for speeding and drunk driving.

New Jersey's record as the safest state in the nation, according to the number of highway deaths, proves that the speed limit and toughness in dealing with offenders works.

States in the west and southwest, where motorists commonly drive at 70 to 80 miles in wide-open country, recorded a 23 percent increase in auto fatalities last year. Ironically, these states want their gas allocation increased in the event of realigning. I fear reducing the allocation to states that fail to adequately enforce the 55-mile per hour limit.

The condition of the nation's highways also contributes to the casualties on the roads. It is clear that the nation's expensive highway system is in need of repair. The need for highway repair, funds for highway repair, and improvements have not increased fast enough to keep up with the expansion of the highway system and the number of vehicles on the road. In short, our road system is taking a bad pounding.

Highway safety experts claim that one out of every five bridges in the U.S. is unsafe. Used daily by millions of cars, trucks, and buses, these bridges imperil human life. They also present difficulties for industry and agriculture through weight limitations and increased transportation costs. More than 26,000 bridges need to be replaced or repaired.

Another step that must be taken in the elimination of hazards. States have reported as much as a 50 percent reduction in fatalities and a 20 percent decrease in injuries at locations where roadways hazards have been corrected. Better engineering and traffic signal controls can make the highways safer and reduce the enormous costs of insurance and medical care for the victims of auto accidents. Improved traffic flow also reduces the amount of pollution by as much as 50 percent by avoiding unnecessary idling.

The opportunity to keep the nation's highway system from literally falling apart has been enhanced by a decision of the Department of Transportation and Congress to allocate a major expansion of the inter-state highway system. That frees $10 billion a year for highway improvements and mass transit.

As long as the automobile is the most important part of our national transportation system, it will be difficult to abandon our costly and important highway system through neglect. That would expose millions of Americans to slaughter on unsafe roads.

PUBLICITY CONSCIOUS—Colleen O'Grady (left) of Union and Carol Lamont of Englishtown pore over books as part of studies in medical records technology at Union County Technical Institute. The two were among a group of students who recently began a publicity campaign to make the field more viable to potential enrollees.

Students publicizing medical records field

Contending that medical record technology is a field not yet well known to high schoolers seeking career goals, students in the program at Union County Technical Institute recently began a publicity campaign to make the course more viable.

"They organized themselves," said Margaret Hayes, coordinator of the program at the Scotch Plains campus. "They approached guidance counselors at local junior and senior high schools and explained the type of work done in the field. The reaction was quite favorable."

Graduates of the two-year associate degree program handle health records for hospitals, private physicians, insurance companies and nursing homes, among other employers. Record coding, operational research and working with legal documents all come into play in the course of a medical record technician's duties.

During the four semesters at UCTI, students spend time in clinical practice at affiliated hospitals. Starting with a one-day-a-week assignment during the first semester, the medical record technology enrollee will spend three full days on affiliation during the final semester of the program. Upon graduation, he or she is eligible to take the national exam for certification as an accredited record technician.

Transferrability is available to a four-year bachelor's degree program and several UCTI graduates are earning undergraduate degrees at other American institutions of higher learning.

Starting salaries for graduates ranges from $8,000 to $11,000, Hayes said. As for getting a job, she added, "we've had 100 percent placement."

Fashion show to aid March of Dimes fund

Plans for the benefit fashion show for the Union County Chapter, March of Dimes have been extraordinary, according to Jewel Montclair, coordinator of the event.

The show, billed as "An Evening of Splendor and Delight with Designer Fashions," is scheduled for Sunday at 7 p.m. at the Blue Ribbon Inn, 256 Hollywood Ave., Hillside.

The fashion show, presented in two segments, will consist of original designs, many modeled by the designers, and selected fashions from local boutiques.

"We've had tremendous cooperation from leading fashion retailers, especially those from Elizabeth," states Montclair.

From Galaby's World at 35 Broad St., Elizabeth, owner GIG has been instrumental in coordinating men's fashions for the show. "Many of the men's fashions selected for the March of Dimes benefit I have designed myself or selected from our line," states GIG.

Also assisting Montclair in producing the fashion event is Abich, owner of Prox, a men's boutique at 19 Broad St., Elizabeth.

Abich will offer a 20 percent discount to clients referred by attendance of the event.

Also participating in this benefit show is Sedrick Bross, manager of Shirts And, 210 Broad St., Elizabeth. Sedrick has selected fashions from the boutique, and plans to model many of these fashions himself.

Dolores Roberson will handle the announcing for the show. She teaches courses in modeling and has a show on Channel 12 CATV of Elizabeth. Tickets may be obtained by calling 331-0320.

Persons who stop smoking also greatly reduce their chances of developing cancers of the throat, esophagus, bladder, and pancreas. When combined with alcohol, cigarette smoking produces an additional

Historic N.J. papers Vol. 1 is being published

The New Jersey Historical Commission this month will publish the first of five volumes of "The Papers of William Livingston," the first elected governor of New Jersey. Livingston served from 1776 to 1790, guiding the new state through the American Revolution and the political ferment that followed.

Alexander Hamilton praised Livingston as one of the "most distinguished patriots." One writer classed him with Thomas Paine as a political propagandist. John Adams read his first address to the legislature and called it "the most elegant and masterly ever made in America."

A Historical Commission spokesman said: "Throughout his tenure Livingston labored against the limitations imposed on him by the state constitution, which gave the governor practically no power. Aggressive, hardworking and persuasive, he exercised so much influence in office that the legislature reelected him to the post each year until he died.

Volume One of the papers begins in 1774. Livingston had retired to a country estate in Elizabethtown after practicing law and politics in New York City, but political turmoil eventually drew him back into public life. He served in the first two Continental Congresses and briefly commanded the New Jersey militia opposite Staten Island. In August 1776, the newly formed state legislature elected him governor. He established the Council of Safety six months later to control Loyalist activities, and it eventually

N.J. ranks 3rd in solar works

New Jersey now ranks third in the nation behind California and Florida in the production of solar collectors for solar energy systems, according to U.S. Department of Energy (DOE) figures released by the N.J. Department of Energy.

During the first six months of 1978, U.S. DOE's most current figures, eight New Jersey solar equipment manufacturers produced 400 square feet of solar collectors. This was 24 times the number manufactured during the previous six-month period in 1977.

The sharp rise in production catapulted New Jersey from fifth to third place in the nation.

The largest group of buyers for solar energy equipment has been homeowners. Residential use accounted for 83.5 percent of the collectors produced in the state, mostly for pool heating. The rest were installed for commercial, industrial and agricultural uses.

Additional information about installing a solar hot water system is available from the Office of Alternative Technology, N.J. Department of Energy, 1100 Raymond Blvd., Newark, N.J. 07102. Telephone (201) 648-6292.

AAI selects 'light' slogan
Stanley Polyzak of Perth Amboy submitted the winning slogan in an Anti-Light Pollution Contest sponsored by Amateur Astronomers for its members. His slogan, "Let there be stars and night, without manmade light," earned Polyzak a certificate and a prize.

Honorable mention went to Richard Byrne for his slogan, "Don't try to outshine the stars; turn off your lights."

AAI, which operates the Sperry Observatory jointly with Union College, conducted the contest to encourage members' interest in resisting a further deterioration of the astronomical sky by excessive outdoor lighting. Entries were judged on both content and grammar by a panel of members of the executive committee.
