Plainfield Man Named to Board Of Freeholders

R. S. Rowland of Plainfield, the new member of the Board of Chosen Freeholders, who will begin active participation in its work at the budget session next Monday, declared himself today as fully in accord with the board's general program. Rowland succeeded James H. Ackerman, Plainfield, who resigned to give full time to private business.

Rowland, an investment banker in H. T. Carey & Company, 120 Broadway, Manhattan, brings to the freeholder board more than a decade of experience in public office. He is in his third term as a member of the Plainfield Board of Health and was in its Common Council from 1929 to 1932. He has been a bank director and for many years has been president of the Plainfield Country Club.

Practically all the committee work that Ackerman performed has been allotted to Rowland by the board's director, William J. McMane. His election to the vacancy gives him tenure on the board until December 31. That means that he will be a candidate for nomination in the Republican primary election next May.

The job they said couldn't be done

That's what they said at the start of the war... it couldn't be done! control. The railroad employees and their facilities became, in effect, a great Army of Transportation.

People frankly doubted the ability of the American railroads to handle the sudden mighty outpouring of industry mobilized for battle. Working "around the clock"... never relaxing their vigilance... the people of the railroads have tackled their jobs with the same grim determination that has brought victory to our men on the field of battle.

Hadn't the railroads had trouble during World War I? Hadn't there been traffic congestion, confusion of delivery at ports, scarcity of equipment with which to handle military supplies? Was there any reason to expect that they would do any better this time?

At the beginning of this war, the railroads owned approximately 25% fewer freight cars, 30% fewer passenger cars and 25% fewer locomotives than during the previous war. Not only that—replacements of equipment were in many cases long overdue! Could the railroads surmount this great handicap? They could—and they did!

Recognizing the need for teamwork, the individual railroads of this country got together and set up a centralized Battle of Railway Transportation.

A group of bored and weary men were kicking and passing an inchoate mass, which proved to be old socks tied up roughly in discarded shoe leather. This was their football. Nearby, another group was playing catch with a bulbous object, made of the same material, which was their baseball.

These two athletic makeshifts were the total recreational equipment in Stalag Luft 4, a new camp of American airmen in Germany, when it was first visited by a representative of War Prisoners Aid of the Y.M.C.A., a participating service of the National War Fund.

There were literally no materials for education, religion, music or vocational training.

The visitor sent urgent telegrams to the Geneva headquarters of his organization for the leisure-time supplies which have since transformed this camp. Taken in the records which he had brought, borrowed the Commandant's gramophone, and announced a "Concert." The whole camp attended, sitting on the ground between the huts. They applauded with a fervor beyond that of any concert or opera audience of free men. A worn and tiny gramophone, a few records, and a meadow. These were the ingredients.

When he left, hundreds followed him to the gates to say goodbye.

Congressman Case Explains Voting on Dies Committee

...to the rights of the minority to oppose and to make their opposition heard. And, more than that, it means that there are certain fundamental rights which every citizen has and which no power in the Government or elsewhere on earth can take away—the rights of religious liberty, economic opportunity and civil and political liberty. Among other things, it means that an individual has the right to hold and express views which do not at the moment agree with those held by even the great majority of his fellow citizens, so long as they are held and expressed openly and are not accompanied by activities calculated to destroy or overthrow our institutions.

—If any of these great fundamental liberties is threatened or denied, they are all endangered, and with them the essence of our American democracy.

These liberties were endangered, I believe, by certain of the methods and activities of the former Dies Committee. It seemed to me essential that before the Committee was continued, or its successor created, two things should be done. First, that we should redefine the clear distinction between subversive and un-American activities, on the one hand, and, on the other, the mere holding or expressing of unpopular opinions or opinions which might be unpopular with the individual members of a particular committee. Second, that there should be established the fundamental procedural principles governing the operation of the committee and its activities, including the right of the individual under scrutiny to be investigated impartially and given a fair chance to tell his side of the story; and the absence of sensation-seeking and headline-hunting activities on the part of the committee and its individual members.

I believe that a majority of those who opposed the Rankin Resolution did so for the reasons indicated above. In all fairness, however, I must point out that most of those who supported it were no less concerned about the discredited methods and activities of the old committee but felt less strongly that a vote for the resolution would be interrupted as a blanket endorsement of such methods and activities.

I hope and believe, that the consideration given these matters since the vote was taken last Wednesday, including discussions had on the floor of the Congress and in the editorial pages of the newspapers, has reestablished those principles—as I had thought they should have been reestablished before the vote was taken—and that the newly created Committee will operate under them. If it does, I am sure that it can make a tremendous contribution not only to our effort in this war but also to the preservation and strengthening of those rights and institutions which are the essence of what we mean by American.

Telephone Shortages as another year starts

Last year, using facilities released by other customers and such little added equipment as we could obtain, we continued to provide all telephone service essential to the war effort and public health and safety, and were able to release for connection 18,000 deferred applications for service in addition to those classified as essential. Unfilled applications, however, increased from 25,000 to 70,000.

In this fourth year of war we expect again to meet fully and promptly all essential needs for service, and will do everything possible to provide service for as many of those waiting as we can. Plans are under way for the manufacture of substantial quantities of telephone equipment, which if obtainable will go far towards relieving the situation. But the fulfillment of these plans must depend on the progress of the war. Telephone manufacturers are being called upon to supply in increasing amounts communications and other electrical equipment for our armed forces, and these requirements must be met first.

When conversion to peacetime production is again possible, tremendous quantities of cable, switchboard and telephone apparatus of all sorts will be needed to care for the backed-up demand for telephone service. This will be a task of long duration requiring all the skill of telephone workers in factories, research laboratories, and operating telephone companies in New Jersey and throughout the nation.

If you are waiting for a telephone, you can be sure your application is not forgotten. It will be filled in its turn just as soon as possible. Please know that we appreciate your patience and your understanding of the situation which prevents our serving you without delay.
