LINDEN - An environmentally-friendly fuel provider is hoping to drop anchor in the city.

Green Energy Resources, of New York City, announced they plan to open port space in Linden, one of three locations the company will run on the East Coast as they try to expand the "green" biofuel market.

"This area gives us a great opportunity to access the market around New York City, Northern Jersey and even Eastern Pennsylvanía," said president and CEO Joseph Murray.

City officials, however, said they are unaware of the company's plans and noted there are no properties along the Linden waterfront have been sold or leased to them.

The letter further stated that school board member Gerard Laudati's son was a member of the graduating class. Laudati's son was not, however, among the students who failed to meet graduation requirements.

Pit bull attacks

By Jackeline Leon Staff Writer

HILLSIDE - A pit bull wandering the streets of Hillside was shot and killed by an officer after it attacked two township residents and charged at law enforcement officials, according to a spokesman for the police department.

Sgt. Matthew Cove, who had been patrolling in the area of Summit and Conklin avenues, was flagged down by a resident just after noon on Aug. 13. The resident told Cove he was bitten on the hand by the dog, prompting the officer to pursue the animal toward the Newark border, along Summit Avenue. There he witnessed the pit bull attack another individual.

"The dog was biting the second victim's hand," said Detective Lt. Vincent Ricciardi. "Cove...shot the dog twice in the chest to stop its' attack on the second victim."

According to Ricciardi, the shots forced the dog to let go of the second victim, but it later charged at Cove, who fired a final shot, killing the dog.

Medical attention was provided for the second victim. The identity of the dog's owner was unknown at press time.

Solicitation method questioned

Fuentes recently told concerned residents the FOP has the right to make the calls seeking donations and clarified that the PBA only solicits via mail annually.

Alma Roberts, director of the Golden Age Club, said she received a call from people soliciting donations and could not understand what it was all about. She was thankful Fuentes presented the facts. "We don't want to be disturbed by telemarketers," Roberts said.

Fuentes said that in 2002, a bill was proposed by the State PBA to halt all unions from utilizing telemarketing services.

"The bill was opposed by only one entity, the state FOP," Fuentes said.

Roberts said some solicitors for the FOP have been calling as late as 9 p.m. "I respect the police department and all the officers but we just wanted an explanation." he Sgt. Bob Perez, secretary for the FOP, says his union does not solicit past 9 p.m. and that not all calls are made by telemarketers.

"Some of our officers make calls too." Perez said.

He said the union has permission to utilize the telemarketing firm through the state FOP and also has a permit approved by the State Attorney General's Office.

"They have the right to hire a telemarketing firm, its just their tactics that are in question," Fuentes said, who noted he disagrees with telemarketers posing as Union officers to attain funds.

"Our membership does not appreciate receiving one of these telemarketing calls during dinner or late at night and that is why PBA Local 69 would never hire a telemarketer to do business for us," Fuentes added.

PBA local 69 runs an annual Pienic for Autism, which is coming up in September, a car show held Aug. 17 at Lincoln Tech, which also benefits autism research, and just recently played a charity softball game against the little league coaches to benefit the 12-year-old team traveling to Cooperstown, according to Fuentes.

Perez said he respects the officers that belong to the PBA. "We just have this difference of opinion," Perez said.

He noted that donations benefit the Jardine Academy for Cerebral Palsy and the Special Olympics. "We also give to muscular dystrophy because my son has that," Perez said.

The local FOP has been in the township for the past 14 years and has approximately 25 members.

According to Perez, the FOP is one of the largest police unions in the country.

Green Energy seeks Linden port

Although ports are also planned for Camden and Long Island, N.Y., Linden is the crucial port for the large scale expansion.

Murray said the 100-acre site is the only port that is deep enough to handle international shipments.

Since many of the facilities needed are already present, including warehouse and dock space, Murray said the hub can be operational by September. Initially, between 10,000 and 20,000 tons of wood biomass is expected to pass through the port each month.

Murray hopes stricter federal environmental standards for fuel use will double or even triple his company's shipment figures in the next few years.

The Linden port is expected to have a staff of 5 to 10 employees, although as many as 50 jobs, such as truckers transporting in supplies, could be created regionally.

"The renewable resource market is expanding," Murray said,

Sierra Club state director Jeff Tattel said he has ing waste into fuel from milling or farm waste. He said the demand for environmentally-friendly fuel and related technology makes attaining this fuel cheaper.

"It makes sense because you're taking something that would have went into a landfill or the waste stream and creating energy," said Tattel. "Companies are seeing green equals green; you can make money by doing right by the environment."

GER uses waste wood from saw or lumber mills that would usually go to a landfill or be dumped and turns it into wood biofuel, according to Murray.

"We are developing energy sources. We do not cut down trees. Our...philosophy is to use what is already...out there," Murray added.

Customers also receive carbon credits for using the eco-friendly fuel. The credits are a way for industries to comply with regulations on how much carbon gases and greenhouse gases that can be released into the air.

Administrative changes reviewed

(Continued from Page 1) change stemmed from the Charter Study Advisory Committee, a group formed earlier this year to look into changing the township's form of government. Such a study has not been performed in Cranford since the 1970s.

According to advisory committee member and former Township Clerk Rosalie Hellenbrecht, who presented the findings of the studies, research and debate among the committee led more members to see the merit of the township's current charter. They did, however, see the need for some changes.

"It seems like this kind of government could and should work," Puhak said. "Now we have to see how to make it work better."

Part of the motive behind establishing a stronger administrative code is to reduce the role of commissioners in the day-to-day management of the town, providing them with more time and energy to devote to constituents and other duties, according to Hellenbrecht.

An ordinance to further pursue the possibility of a change in government was introduced and tabled after a tied vote in July. This ordinance would have authorized another ballet question, offering voters the option of having another charter study performed - this one conducted under state regulation by an elected five-member committee.

Puhak said it is unknown when the subject may be revisited, "With so much on the Township Committee's plate, I don't foresee it happening in the near future," he said.

To weeks prior to the groundbreaking, Department of Public Works employees unearthed a commemorative brass plaque that had accompanied the pole but was missing — officials long believed it was lost or stolen.

With the finding, however, came a loss.

Township Engineer Richard Marsden informed officials on Aug. 5 that a brass sphere crowning the pole was missing and probably stolen.

The possible theft occurred after the pole was moved recently to the Conservation Center on Birchwood Avenue.

"It was in the high weeds and we moved it out so the contractor could look at it. But, I'm not sure if it was an intentional hit or not,' Marsden said, who noted he does not know the value of the ball.

"It's...very disappointing, especially in this time of the flagpole's restoration," Mayor Robert Puhak said about the missing ball.

"In a time of fiscal challenges, escalating costs to restore the decaying flagpole led to questions regarding the ability and practicality of bringing home this important symbol," Puhak said.

The high price of gasoline has caused Americans to reduce their driving. According to the U.S. Department of Transportation, since 1980, Americans had been increasing the number of miles they drive each year by about 3 percent. But in November 2007 that trend reversed. And by May 2008, according to the department, Americans drove 10 billion miles fewer than they did in May 2007.

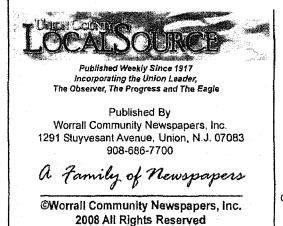

In some ways, we like the way Americans have reacted to the higher price of gasoline. Sales of SUVs are way down and sales of gas-efficient cars and hybrids are up. People are car pooling more. We have seen gas-thrifty scooters on the streets, just like in Europe cities. Ridership on mass transportation is increasing. And in casual conversations with co-workers and neighbors, we hear of people altering their driving habits, replanning vacations and opting to drive not their SUV but their more fuel-efficient vehicle for everyday chores. In short, we are finally decreasing our dependence on foreign oil, and starting to adopt fuel-efficient measures. This is excellent news.

Not that high gasoline prices are good. They are not. They inflate the cost of nearly everything, and many businesses with profit margins based on inexpensive fuel are finding it hard to survive. Meals on Wheels has had to decrease its wheel time. And municipal budgets are allocating more for fuel at the cost of existing programs.

We believe the days of cheap gasoline are over, and that the next world crisis or natural disaster could trigger a jump in oil prices that is unbearable to many. Towns and families who will fare best will be those who have taken steps now to reduce their energy costs. In Summit, for example, a Sustainability Task Force is discussing the possibility of implementing a law against leaving cars idle on city streets and offering preferred parking for those driving hybrid vehicles or who carpool. The Union County Board of Chosen Freeholders has also taken steps toward "greening" the county and curbing greenhouse emissions by initiating a comprehensive Energy Master Plan.

These steps are modest beginnings that must continue. Some town councils, however, appear simply to be reshuffling their budgets as they wait for gas prices to fall or some other solution to miraculously appear. That is the wrong

The national goal of energy self-sufficiency can only be achieved through baby steps — each one of us doing our part. Saving a gallon here and a gallon there added up to those 10 billion fewer miles we drove in May. This current gas crisis has triggered conservation steps that we should maintain as we move toward energy self-sufficiency.

A look at 'cheaters' and their cousins

The story of the two kids from Parsippany who were dropped off each morning to attend Hillside schools is recalled by Angelo Bon-

For 31 years, before retiring, it was his job to track down and expose those people who thought it was OK to cheat the system and enroll children in schools where they didn't belong. There were a whole lot of examples.

In the case of the Parsippany commuters, their parents who worked at the Newark Airport found it more convenient to have their kid just attend the Hillside Schools.

During his time, Bonnano has heard all the excuses: the kids were visiting; they were cousins; they're godchildren or nephews were all the excuses that have been pitched. The retired health officer spoke to "the cloak and dagger" aspects of the job. His surveillance and filing reports on the kids with the Board of Education were what he did.

He called Hillside the "hole in the donut" with parents from Newark and Irvington seeing the relative benefits of sneaking their kids in without the tuition payment.

A board member in another Union County town described the process of investigation and questioning by the local board attorney to expose the now resident kids.

The effort is serious and that is proper. The cost of educating one student can vary in Union County communities from $14,000 to $20,000 per student. As Bonnano said, "the one thing I never heard from any of the parents, was "yes I admit this was wrong.'

By Frank Capece

Stuart Mack from Rutgers knows something about cheating. In his position as director of the Center for Governmental Services at the Bloustein School of Planning and Public Policy, he has focused on illegal housing conversions. He recently said, "Pick any suburban community and you'll find tremendous variation. In some places, you have immigrants who are finding inexpensive housing and doubling up and tripling up."

The horror stories speak to one Union County apartment complex, where tenants allegedly sleep in shifts, using large sheets to partition off portions of a garden apartment.

Both sides are pushing back. You don't have to be a rocket scientist to figure out a problem exists when large amounts of garbage is placed at the curb and a whole lot of people come and go from a supposedly one family house.

illegal Communities pass dwelling ordinances that require 125 square feet of floor space for every person older than 4 years old.

One housing officer said, "People see the potential to make a quick buck. They rent houses out, a resident of Cranford.

charge a per-room rate and wind up recovering income far in excess of what their mortgage payments are.'

On balance, Mack and others say the problem is lack of affordable housing. "People wouldn't be doubling up if there weren't an affordability problem," he adds.

In Union County, the group New Jersey Future estimates we have a huge number of citizens who spend at least 35 percent of their gross income on housing costs.

The conflicts abound on the subject. The U.S. Department of Justice has picked up the pace in reviewing the larger number of permanent foreign Labor certifications. Shay Goldstein on the other hand, as the executive director of the New Jersey Immigration Policy, fights for new housing opportunities in the suburban towns.

State efforts to end suburban sprawl and the elimination of regional contribution agreements where towns sell part of their housing responsibility to cities point to more pressure on the older suburbs.

The need for housing is undoubtedly going to grow. Still, the kids who attend the wrong school or the family who illegally convert their house to permit illegal boarders are law-breakers and cheaters. It's wrong what they do and should not be tolerated. Can you imagine the mess if guys like Bonnano and building officials hadn't been doing their job?

The 'why' behind the election ballot

part one in a series about running for office.

As another election season approaches, the problems confronting us at all levels of government promise to again be given little more than lip service, as a process originally designed to select the most qualified representatives instead yields the most compliant political operatives. In this series I'll try to make sense of, first, the process, then the problems resulting, and finally offer possible solutions.

Our first contact with the electoral process often comes in high school where the popular kids vie to be class president. Posters are hung, hands are shaken, and maybe even a mock debate conducted if a classroom is open. There are really no issues since the position is largely ceremonial. If you win, you go to a few meetings after school and discuss things that you have no practical influence upon.

Fast forward to adulthood, where most of the elections I've witnessed have pretty much adopted the high school playbook. But instead of handmade posters, there are lawn signs and billboards. Instead of standing outside some student center handing out buttons you stand outside the A&P handing out brochures. Instead of engaging in awkward conversations with the electorate in the halls you knock on their doors.

Unfortunately, what seems to remain constant, in small-town New Jersey anyway, is the largely budget caps and state aid pretty much dictating how money is spent and what services are to be provided, most local officials have little to do but rubber stamp decisions handed down by the state or the courts as filtered through accountants and lawyers. Towns have as much say about their futures as that high school class president has about curriculum. Sure, they can complain to the principal about concerns their classmates have but, outside of transferring, they have little practical option but to go along with what they are told to do.

This is a direct result of having too many governing bodies staffed by part-timers, elected in popularity contests without any pertinent experience that would prepare them to govern confidently. So how do they get elected? Mostly by luck.

There will be a presidential election this year so in Kenilworth, we'll probably have about 3,500 voters as compared to 2,200 in an off-year. What this means is that at least 1,300 votes will be cast ignorantly by people who feel an obligation to vote for somebody but will have no clue as to the identity, ceremonial nature of the job. With much less the qualifications, of the candidates at the local level. These are toss-up votes that usually track the top of the ticket and have as much business being cast as a barber has of doing angioplasty, and usually with similar result.

Of those who vote every year there is a core group, possibly 70 percent, who vote party line, regardless of the candidate. They vote based on how they were brought up, either adopting or rebelling against family preferences. That leaves a small percentage up for grabs who gravitate towards whomever they hope or believe will be the likely winners, either because they know them personally or have some familiarity with the name. It is to lure this swing group that party committees seek the popular kids to fill out their tickets.

This system has been around for years now and everybody could have a good time with their campaign breakfasts and meet-andgreets with higher-level politicians where you pay $50 to eat ham and eggs in the same room with someone who might have appeared on local access cable once. Except these days we have a complication.

We are in deep trouble. People are losing their homes, their pensions and even their lives because problems have been allowed to fester as elected figureheads apply palliatives to cankerous sores, notpossessing the requisite tools to operate.

A great Project Grad

It's hard to believe that more than a month has passed since we celebrated the graduation of the Cranford High School Class of 2008.

Once again, the graduates enjoyed a wonderful Project Graduation event to add to the memorable occasion. In addition to the many parents and school officials, we want to thank the local businesses, community organizations and merchants whose services and generosity made this special event possible. The success of Project Graduation depends on the support of so many dedicated people and community organizations. Again, thank you for your help and we wish the best of luck to our graduates as they move on.

Attendance issues

To the Editor:

Regarding John Bury's "Seems to Me" column appearing in the Aug. 7 edition of Union County LocalSource. Though he had some interesting observations to make with relation to what issues the Union County Freeholders have control over and what they do not, Mr. Bury's closing remarks were just a tad off the mark. Mr. Bury closed his letter asking why the Republicans haven't put in appearances at the freeholder meetings. I have to ask Mr. Bury why he wasn't making appearances at the meetings from early 2004 until recently, when I attended almost every single meeting as a Republican candidate for freeholder until side lined by a serious illness, just weeks before election day. Or why wasn't he making appearances at the meetings when senior citizen, Jerry Goldman, a member of the Elizabeth Republican Committee, was attending meetings on such a regular basis that a chair in the audience bears a brass plaque with his name. Or why wasn't he making appearances at the meetings when former Linden resident, Kevin Retcho, an active Republican, was asking questions and making comments on a fairly regular basis.

There is no argument that the Republicans have recently hit a dry spell of meeting attendees. But it should be understood that even though GOP leaders are perpetually disgusted with the Democratic freeholders' shenanigans, many have expressed the feeling that attending the meetings can prove hazardous to one's health. Is it any wonder that the GOP members are avoiding this situation altogether as not being worth the aggravation because they are blown off anyway simply because they are — horror of horrors — Republicans?

Now that county residents have received their new tax bills and we head into the "annual pre-election day Freeholder spending season," there will be new individuals showing up at the meetings, they will voice their concerns and attempt to ask questions which may or may not be answered.

Teen dies in fatal car accident

By Joseph M. D'Alise Staff Writer

A 16-year-old who attended Governor Livingston High School in Berkeley Heights died last week after crashing a family member's minivan into a utility pole on Route 22 in Springfield, according to authorities.

The Mountainside youth was driving east on Route 22 at approximately 4 a.m. on Aug. 12 when his vehicle struck the pole. He died shortly after being taken to University Hospital in Newark, Springfield police said.

Luckily, there were no passengers in the vehicle with Black.

Black had been driving from his father's home in Mountainside and was not wearing a seat belt when the accident occurred.

Police are unsure where he was heading in the car.

Because the case is under investigation and because Black was a minor, both the Springfield Police Department and the Union County Prosecutor's Office declined to comment.

Black's father could not be reached for comment.

The high school junior was a

A DOG'S PEDICURE

A dog's nails grow constantly, and how often nails need to be clipped will depend on a dog's lifestyle. If a dog does a lot of walking on hard surfaces, its nails may be worn away naturally through friction. However, if a dog stays on grass, clipping its nails will become an essential part of grooming. Failure to do this can lead to crippling pain in the dog's paws and may cause permanent damage and malformation. If clipping the nails is difficult to do, a good alternative is to take the pet to the vet or to a groomer. They know how to cut nails, and the dog may react better to a stranger doing this than to its owner.

T.L.C. PET DOCTOR, we recommend that you pay close attention to your cat so that you may notice any afference in behavior. A professional check-up professional check-up can determine if your cat has diabetes. If you notice increased thirst or uninetical and the control of thirst or urination or if your cat just isn't acting normal be sure to bring your pet to 1326 Stuyvesant Ave., Union as soon as possible. To schedule an appointment, or to have your questions answered, call 908.686.7080. We provide complete companion animal care, including dental care, and x-ray services.

P.S. Since a dog may be reluctant to have its nails clipped, starting this process at a very young age is a good idea.

Pressure on for quick cleanup at dump site

By Joseph M. D'Alise Staff Writer

SPRINGFIELD -Residents of Springfield, as well as local environmental groups, are pressuring township officials to correct the environmental damage caused by asphalt millings that were dumped near the Rahway River and at a county park several weeks ago.

Although the piles of asphalt were removed by the state Department of Environmental protection from the park behind Marion Avenue following several resident complaints that they pose a health risk, makeshift roads created with these millings remain.

In a letter to Springfield Mayor Bart Fraenkel from Dennis Miranda, executive director of the Rahway River Association, Miranda said the millings may contain dangerous carcinogens that could further pollute the Rahway River, the sole source of water for residents of Rahway.

He also suggested the township hire an environmental firm to conclude the extent of the damage done in order to protect wetlands in the area and the river.

"The town really needs to restore the site to its original condition," Miranda said, "You that having a road there is wrong. Something should be able to walk back there and see nothing but a natural vegetative area."

Fraenkel said the comments made in the letter were sensational. "It all seems like an attempt to scare people," he said.

In July, after residents first complained to the township about the dumping, public works crews were seen at the site removing the piles of asphalt left by the river.

Marion Avenue resident Harry Eckhart said these efforts were not enough.

"I have children that frequently take walks and play in the area, that is supposed to be protected wetlands, behind my house," Eckhart said. "I do not want them to be exposed to potentially hazardous, toxic material. I just want someone from the town to take responsibility for their actions, and correct what's been done."

Fraenkel responded to these complaints by insisting that the roads, which lead to flood-prevention equipment and sewers, are a necessity and that the use of millings was stopped several years ago.

"We have picked up all the piles put there in error," Fraenkel stated. "It is incorrect to think has to be there, and we are working with several environmental agencies to see what would be a satisfactory material to use."

The mayor also stated that some residents in town are just looking to assign blame, not correct the issue. "We are addressing who's responsible for the dumping internally," he said.

When Union County officials learned of the dumping, some concerns were also expressed by Daniel Bernier, the director of the county Park Division of Planning and Environmental Ser-

"The placement of loose millings without capping or sealing is a violation of New Jersey's solid waste laws. Placements of this or any other type of fill in a floodplain, wetlands or riparian corridor is also not allowed," Bernier wrote to Springfield officials recently. "...I respectfully request that the township...continue its effort to remove all remnants of millings."

Fraenkel acknowledged the letter and suggested the township is doing everything possible to clean up the area.

Police track down alleged drug lord

By Jackeline Leon Staff Writer

UNION - Alejandro Cleves, an alleged heroin trafficker believed to be responsible for arranging for up to six kilograms of the drug to be brought into the country on a weekly basis, was apprehended in Columbia last week.

The arrest in Cleves' birthplace, Medellin, Columbia on Aug. 11, is the culmination of an international investigation between Columbian authorities, the United States Drug Enforcement Administration and the Union County Prosecutor's Office. Cleves, 28, had been eluding arrest and prosecution on third degree drug distribution charges for approximately three years prior to his arrest last week.

Cleves, who had resided in Union County since he entered the country when he was 7 years old. has been indicted in the county and is being held on a provisional arrest warrant for first degree racketeering and first degree leading a narcotics trafficking network and other offenses, the Prosecutor's Office said in a press release Monday. If convicted, Cleves may receive a life sentence. Cleves is awaiting extradition to the United States. He is currently being held on $2 million bail as ordered by Morris County Superior Court Judge Theodore Bozonelis.

According to the Prosecutor's Office, Bozonelis signed the warrants, because he had been serving as acting wiretap judge for Union County. A court date for Cleves has

Linden rejects first grant bid to study fire department merger

He said the timing for the proposal was right because of the construction of three new firehouses in

Smith said the current firehouse at the intersection of 8th Avenue and Chestnut Street could be renovated and used to solve the lack of recreation facilities in the borough. He said the building could be converted into a community center with pool, a fitness center or community meeting space for residents.

Before the study can begin, both municipal councils must approve the grant application. Some council members and public safety employees in Roselle are wary of the possible change.

If both communities decide to merge departments, Roselle would dissolve its department and pay Linden a fee for its fire department services.

Councilman and Fire Commissioner Jamel Holley, a Smith rival, voiced concern over the timing of the issue, saying he was upset that no representatives of the Fire Department or Public Safety Committee were brought into the process before the resolution to apply for the grant was drafted.

"I have no issues with seeking ways to find funding or to investigate efficiency in any department. But this was not a proposal that was open for discussion," Holley

Smith dismissed the charges by saying he did not think input was necessary at the early stage of planning.

"I can understand them getting involved once we get grant money, they have to be involved. But we are not merging yet. We are not even doing the study yet... what I'm asking is to get the grant," he responded.

Roselle currently relies on mutual aid in case of a large-scale emergency.

The total staff includes 29 fulltime firefighters and 14 volunteers. Linden has 126 full-time fire-

Roselle Deputy Fire Chief Paul Mucha said the idea of mutual aid can be misleading. He noted that even the Elizabeth Fire Department — the largest in the county - cannot fully staff a two-alarm

"The idea of mutual aid is a necessity for departments these days," Mucha said. He said regulations to protect firefighters demand that for every two firefighters to go into a building, there must be two outside to provide backup support.

Mucha said a more important factor in citizen safety is response time from the department headquarters to the scene of an emergency.

"We provide all fire services and ambulances in Roselle Now you would have to wait for Linden to come," warned Mucha.

Smith's counterpart, Linden Mayor Richard Gerbounka, said he approved performing the study, as long as it did not cost Linden any money and Roselle was doing the work applying for the grant.

"Most of the changes would affect Roselle, but it has to be beneficial and acceptable to the residents of Linden," Gerbounka said. "We'll wait and see. But you can't continue business as usual and municipalities in general need to look outside box for ways to run efficient government."

Questions surrounding the issue arose at Linden's pre-council meeting on Monday, when the City Council rejected the first grant bid.

Council President Robert Bunk said the governing body was not told about the proposal in advance and did not have enough information to make a decision at this time.

He was also concerned because the grant application requires a $2,000 contribution from each municipality. Bunk said he is planning to meet with Smith, and hopes to get more information so the city can revisit the idea of performing the study.

"We're open to listening to anything...that doesn't necessarily mean were accepting anything," he

How to 'restructure' if the 'glass slipper' is broken

Hillside man's book explores relationship issues

By Janelle LoBello Correspondent

Body, soul, and spirit are three key elements in finding your soul mate according to Quwan Ellis, author of "Is This The One: My Spouse?"

Ellis, 27, who published his first book in 2006 titled, "Bruised But I Refuse To Stay Broken," wrote his second book to help those looking for love to understand themselves, relationships and all the questions in between.

A resident of Hillside, Ellis is both a reverend and a school teacher seeking to provide advice and guidance to young, married couples, unmarried couples and young men and women who are still "looking for love." Ellis explained that he has seen many individuals wasting time and years on someone who is not the ideal partner for them. In his book, he stresses the importance of knowing ourselves before opening up to others.

"Power comes when you know yourself first," Ellis

In addition to knowing yourself, the book encourages people to turn to their faith and religion to guide them to finding their soul mate.

"When you become broken, God has hindsight," explained Ellis. "It is up to God to pick up the pieces... or editorial@thelocalsource.com.

that is when someone can walk into your life."

The book also differentiates between fairytale endings and reality. Ellis explains in his book how often, a person's longing for the "Cinderella" fairytale is not always the case as sometimes individuals believe, "whoever can fit in the glass slipper is the one for me." Ellis suggests that when the glass slipper is broken, it is given to God to be "restructured."

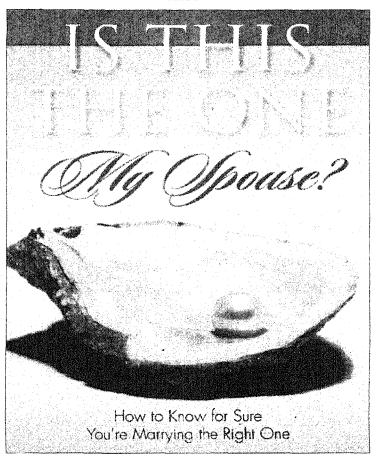

Aside from looking for the perfect person to fill in that empty space in your life, Ellis, who is married and expecting his first child this month, also writes about dealing with abusive relationships and how to really appreciate your significant other, whether it be just a partner or your spouse.

Ellis' second book recounts the differences between being "involved" with someone and just being in a relationship. He claims when you are just involved with someone "there is no commitment and no accountability.'

"Is This The One: My Spouse?" also touches upon guiding individuals to find comfort and love within themselves and their others

Ellis advises, "The greatest change comes when we can change ourselves.3

Sedaka to sing at UCPAC

Performance is set for Sept. 26

Neil Sedaka is slated to perform Sept. 26 at 8 p.m. at the Union County Performing Arts Center, 1601 Irving St.

It is hard to imagine the history of rock and roll without the contributions of Sedaka. For more than four decades, his timeless standards have helped change the face of popular music. With countless hit singles, and platinum and gold records, he is recognized as one of rock and pop music's legendary pioneers, and he remains as vital a force today as he was in the 1950s

In high school, Sedaka formed a vocal group called "The Tokens" and they recorded two singles that became regional hits. Soon after, was Sedaka's introduction to Howard Greenfield. Together they began a successful songwriting partnership. As Neil has noted, "for a long period of time, we wrote a song a day." In the four years between 1959 and 1963, the songwriting team sold more than

In 1958, at the age of 18, Sedaka was catapulted into stardom after Connie Francis recorded his "Stupid Cupid." She then sang the theme song he and Greenfield had written for the 1960 MGM spring break movie classic, "Where The record in Europe. Boys Are," which would end up being her biggest hit.

As a result, Sedaka signed a contract with RCA as a writer and performer and began recording his own material.

years. With original romantic lyrics written by Sedaka and set to the music of Beethoven, Chopin, Rachmaninoff and Tchaikovsky, he has released a collection of these songs on "Classically Sedaka," which went on to earn a gold

Following the smash success of this record, Neil released "Turnweaver," and made another departure with the release of "Tales of Love and Other Passions," recording both old standards and original Recently Sedaka returned to Sedaka songs with a jazz trio.

Night of jazz will help to 'Brake the Cycle'

On Sept. 26, Mayor Joseph Delorio will trek across three states and 275 miles from Gettysburg, Pa. to New York City with 140 other bicyclists to raise money for people living with AIDS/HIV.

On Aug. 28, "a summer evening of romantic jazz with award-winning vocalist, Thos Shipley" will be part of a fundraising effort for the "Braking the Cycle" bike ride.

Shipley was discovered by Leslie Uggams who introduced him in a solo show to a celebrity-packed room at the Claridge in Atlantic City. His Broadway credits include a three-year stint in the production of "Miss

The event will be held at La Casa di Martino, 301 West Clay Ave., Roselle Park. The fixed price dinner includes Gilda Delorio's popular cavetelli and broccoli, sausage and peppers and eggplant rolotini, appetizers, dessert, coffee and soft drinks. # Rockers roll into Rahway

The Rahway Mayor's Summer lished musical arenas as well as Concert Series will continue today with a performance by Suzette "Tina" Dorsey will be on stage doing a "Tribute to Tina Turner."

Suzette is versed in many areas of music and is always looking to take on challenges. She has recorded with Arista Records, has been the leader and director of a 15piece show, four-musician band, and different orchestras. She is capable of performing in estabcreating and leading her own musical group.

The Summer Concert Series will end on Aug. 28 with The Fabulous Grease Band. The Fabulous Greaseband is a seven-member "best of the 50s, 60s, 70s, 80s and 90s rock 'n' roll party band." For information about the Mayor's Summer Concert Series, call 732-669-3600 or go to www.cityofrahwav.com.

Opa! Be 'Greek for a weekend'

Ever hear the words Opa! or Yasou? Did you ever see "My Big Fat Greek Wedding?" Or have you ever read or seen the screen version of "Zorba, the Greek?"

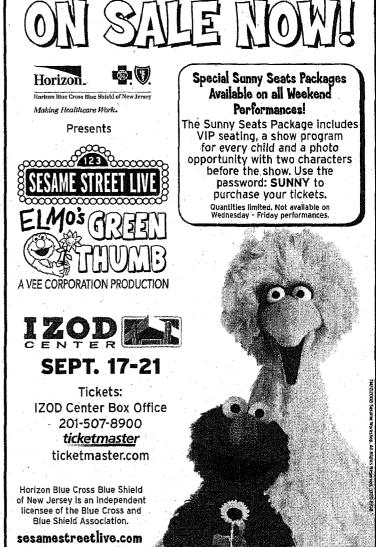

Have you ever had a feeling that you just wanted to let yourself go and dance? Saying 'yes' to any of those proves you will enjoy stopping by the 31st annual St. Demetrios Greek Festival from Sept. 4 to 7 in Union.

Greek-American parishioners of St. Demetrios Church will create a reproduction of a Greek village, giving visitors the sense of actually being transported to Greece.

As always, the festival will feature Greek cuisine such as souvlaki, gyros, tiropites and spanakopites -Greek meatballs, chicken Greek style or Kota, roast leg of lamb, arni and Greek salad.

The deserts will be everything a sweet tooth demands: custard, butter cookies and baklava. To work off all those calories visitors can join in the exuberant Greek dancing, to the accompaniment of live music. Children, dressed in Greek costumes, will also be on hand throughout the festivities. The church is located at 721 Rahway Ave., in Union.

THIS IS H.S. FOOTBALL

By JR Parachini Sports Editor

Let the blood, sweat and tears begin.

This is the time of the season the beginning of practice where players dream of that first scrimmage and coaches blow their whistles the most to stop a drill and try to get it right.

It's hot, it's humid. The air is dry and stands still as does time.

The irony of all this is that teams practice hard in this heat and then - over the course of time - must learn how to win in the cold and rain and sometimes snow if they are to become champions.

Of the 17 football playing schools in Union County, all but three began official practice this week, with those teams opening the weekend of Sept. 12 and 13.

The three Union County schools that will commence practice next week include Watchung Conference members Elizabeth and Scotch Plains and defending Mountain Valley Conference-Valley Division champion New Providence. Those schools will open the weekend of Sept. 19-20.

8 is not enough for Brearley, Roselle

Two other MVC-Valley Division squads - Brearley and Roselle - still had only eight regular season games scheduled as of Monday.

Brearley had all eight of its scheduled as of the state playoff cutoff date weekend, which is Nov. 7-8.

Head coach Scott Miller said during the summer that the Bears might have to look to the Shore Conference for a ninth regular season opponent.

Roselle has only seven games scheduled as of the cutoff date and will need to schedule its other game before that.

Roselle's last scheduled regular season game is its annual Thanksgiving Day against Roselle Park.

The Rams, situated in Central Jersey, Group 2, are attempting to qualify for their first winning season since 1998 and first playoff campaign since 2000.

Sept. 10 a big day: A plan for several new conferences will be voted on by the Execuive Committee of the NJSIAA for the 2009-2010 season.

W.A.W. vs. Time Killers in championship game

Women's hoop league final tomorrow

By JR Parachini Sports Editor

Winning a championship is always sweet. Winning one undefeated is even sweeter.

That's what W.A.W. will attempt to do tomorrow night when it faces Time Killers in the championship game of the Rahway Women's Basketball League.

Tipoff has been changed to 7:15 p.m. at the Rahway Recreation Center.

W.A.W. improved to 8-0 after posting a 46-34 win over Team-4-Real in last Friday night's only semifinal at the rec center.

Time Killers received a forfeit win over defending champion Fully Loaded in the other semifinal and W.A.W. led 26-25 at the half before rolling in the competition. second half and outscoring Team-4-Real 20-9.

The score was 39-31 in favor of W.A.W. for the first 13 minutes of the second half. Nobody could score and turnovers didn't help either team.

League MVP candidate Tara Walker of Marist High School and St. John's University chipped in with six second-half points.

Vanessa Vargas-Espinoza of W.A.W., who played at New Jersey City University, paced all scorers with 5 points. All of her points came from 3-point range.

Nedra Brown and Naimah Smith each scored nine points for Team-4-Real.

Time Killers relies on the play of league MVP candidate Ann Barrino of Caldwell College, who is averaging 11 points.

Graham gives verbal to attend Pitt

By JR Parachini Sports Editor

One of the most exciting and talented athletes that competes in the Watchung Conference plans to continue in college in the Big East.

Elizabeth senior Raymond Graham gave a verbal commitment last Saturday to attend the University of Pittsburgh on a football scholarship.

According to the web site rutgers rival.com, Graham became the second four-star commitment to Pitt's recruiting class of 2009.

Elizabeth third-year head coach Chet Parlavecchio played for rival Penn State and was one of three Nittany Lion captains his senior season of 1981.

Graham made his decision to give a verbal commitment on an unofficial visit to Pitt last weekend.

Graham spoke to PantherLair.com shortly after leaving Pitt's campus Saturday afternoon.

Graham's other college choices included Rutgers, South Carolina, Connecticut, Maryland, Michigan State, North Carolina State and Penn State.

As a sophomore in 2006, Graham rushed for 1,290 yards and 13 touchdowns in helping lead the Minutemen to an 11-1 record and their first North 2, Group 4 championship since 2000.

In the title game against defending champion Phillipsburg at Rutgers, Graham scored Elizabeth's first points on a touchdown run in the fourth quarter of a 14-9 comeback victory.

In an injury-plagued season last year, Graham rushed for 750 yards and scored 12 touchdowns in four games. Elizabeth made the playoffs and finished 6-4.

Fall season nearing

The 2008 scholastic fall season is just around the corner.

Although the football season will commence a week later than it usually has the past few years -Sept. 12 and 13 to be exact - there is one sport that will begin sooner.

In the Mountain Valley Conference, girls' tennis tennis. matches are scheduled for Sept. 5. On that day there will be Johnson at Roselle Park at 4 p.m.

Roselle Park's next match is Sept. 9 at 4 p.m. at home against Roselle Catholic.

Latest RC trip was a knockout

Students attend boxing press conference in NYC

The latest excursion for Roselle Catholic High School's new "Sports in Society" class was a real knockout.

A handful of Roselle Catholic "Sports in Society" students attended the recent New York City press conference to officially announce a highly-anticipated prizefight between undefeated middleweight champion Kelly "The Ghost" Pavlik and former middleweight champion Bernard "The Executioner" Hopkins.

Students listened attentively on Aug. 5 as promoters Todd duBoef (representing Bob Arum's Top Rank) and Richard Schaefer (of Oscar De La Hoya's Golden Boy Promotions) hyped the Oct. 18 HBO Pay-Per-View bout at Boardwalk Hall in Atlantic City.

"Being at the Pavlik-Hopkins press conference was truly a memorable experience," said RC senior Kenenan Jasper, a Roselle resident.

The RC students – accompanied by Roselle Catholic athletic director Joe Skrec, who'll teach the new elective in September, and RC alumnus Andrew Biddulph, who played baseball and won the prestigious Matthes Award during his scholastic career – arrived early for the morning press conference at B.B. King's Blues & Club Grill in Times Square, eventually getting a chance to meet Pavlik, who hails from Youngstown, Ohio.

Top Rank publicist Lee Samuels introduced the students to Pavlik (34-0, 30 KOs), the reigning WBC, WBO and Ring Magazine middleweight world champion. Pavlik enjoyed a stellar year in 2007 when he arrived on the championship scene, scoring wins against Edison Miranda in a title eliminator and Jermain Taylor, a bout in which Pavlik was stunned before coming back to stop Taylor in the seventh round and capture the middleweight title.

"My favorite part of the trip was when we had the chance to meet Kelly Pavlik," said senior Luke Bobbins, a Union resident. "It was very exciting, going to see professional boxers."

"Being an Ohian myself, it was a thrill meeting Kelly "The Ghost" Pavlik," said Biddulph, who was born in Columbus, Ohio and now resides in Roselle. A fight fan, Biddulph has attended several high-profile cards at Boardwalk Hall in Atlantic City.

"I enjoyed the fact that Pavlik did so much interacting with all of the common folk," Biddulph said. "He was out there meeting people, giving interviews, ensuring a good time for others ... Boxing cannot survive and be alive without the fans, and Pavlik took the time to show that he really appreciates his supporters."

Several RC students described Pavlik as "down to earth."

On Oct. 18, Pavlik will move up 10 pounds to make his light heavy-weight debut in what will be a meaningful and career-defining fight against Hopkins.

Known as one of the greatest middleweights of all time and a future Hall of Famer, Hopkins (48-5-1, 32 KOs) held a world title as a middleweight or light heavyweight every year since 1995.

In 2006, Philadelphia's Hopkins moved up to light heavyweight for the first time in his career to defeat Antonio Tarver winning The Ring Magazine World Championship and then dominated Ronald "Winky" Wright at 170 pounds to continue to prove his ring supremacy.

"I'm not as into boxing as I am some other sports, but the boxing press conference was very interesting and entertaining," said Travis Boscia, who runs during all three seasons for the Lions and track coaches Carmine DeNicola and Paul Irwin.

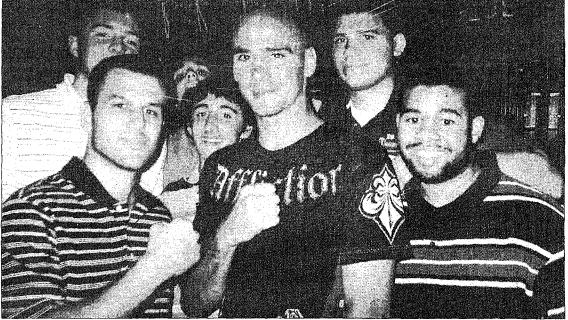

"It was great to see these two incredible boxers talk about their upcoming bout and this trip really made me look forward to the actual fight," said Boscia, who was joined by classmates Ryan Sullivan and Michael Skrec on the sweet science excursion.

The Roselle Catholic students – many of whom also attended the base-ball-themed July edition of HBO's "Costas Now" at New York University – didn't get a chance to meet Hopkins at the press conference, but ran into the ring legend at Penn Station.

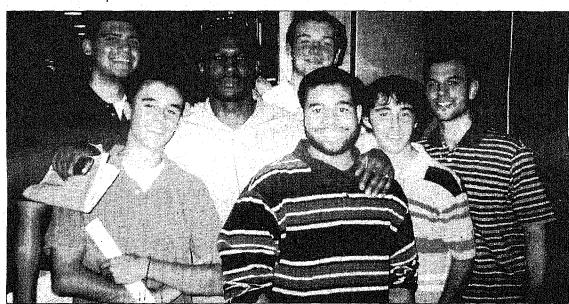

Hopkins – along with all of the other pugilism press conference participants – was on his way to a train bound for Philadelphia, where another press conference was scheduled for Aug. 5. The Roselle Catholic students were waiting to catch a train to the Linden station when they crossed paths with "B-Hop," who patiently posed for a photo.

"It was very humbling to be in the presence of a legendary boxer and legendary sportswriter like Bernard Hopkins and Bert Sugar," RC's Jasper said. "The atmosphere was incredible because we were in a famous restaurant surrounded by professional writers, agents and boxers.

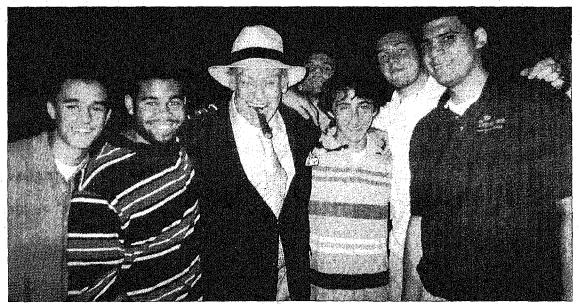

"It was an unforgettable trip."

Middleweight champion Kelly "The Ghost" Pavlik raising a fist to Roselle Catholic students at B.B. # Johnson senior Smorol to continue at Rutgers

His dream is to pitch in the Big East

By JR Parachini Sports Editor

This spring's Rutgers baseball roster consisted of 15 pitchers.

Only three of them were left handers.

To say that southpaw hurlers are always in high demand would be an understatement.

Arguably the best left handed pitcher in Union County this spring was Johnson junior Rob Smorol.

Smorol always dreamed of pitching in the Big East Conference one day, while Rutgers head coach Fred Hill is always looking for a promising lefty.

On Monday, Smorol officially gave Rutgers a verbal commitment to attend the Division 1-A school on a baseball scholarship.

It seems like a perfect connection.

"Rutgers was the best fit in terms of where I wanted to play, which was somewhere in the Northeast," Smorol said. "It's close to home, it's Division 1 and Rutgers has good academics.

"I've always wanted to play in the Big East."

Hill's 40-man roster in 2008 was dominated by Garden State athletes, including 37 New Jersey residents and just one player each from Arizona, New York and Pennsylvania.

Union County residents included junior right handed pitcher Jon McCue of Hillside and Seton Hall Prep, freshman right handed pitcher Billy Murphy of Cranford and Roselle Catholic, freshman infielder Dan Perrine of Scotch Plains and Oratory Prep and junior right handed pitcher Tony Wargo of New Providence.

"Rob always had a dream to pitch in the Big East and that weighed on his mind," said Johnson head coach Dave Kennedy, who just completed his first season at the helm of the Crusaders. "He wants the challenge."

Smorol will be the second family member to play for Hill. Rob's father, Rob Jr., played third base for Hill at Montclair State College in 1979 and 1980 after graduating from Johnson Regional in 1978.

Smorol wanted to get his college decision out of the way sooner than later. He will sign his letter-of-intent in November, which is when the first signing period commences.

"I really wanted to go into my senior season done with all of the college stuff," Smorol said. "I wanted to make this decision as soon as possible."

The 2009 Union County Player of the Year candidate earned First Team All-County honors from The Star-Ledger this past spring. Smorol fashioned a 5-2-1 record that included a stingy 1.24 earned-run average and 64 strikeouts in 45 and 1/3 innings.

He also batted .419 for the 9-10-1 Crusaders, who finished ranked eighth in Union County and reached the Union County Tournament quarterfinals.

"Rob learned how to locate his fastball," Kennedy said. "He had to deal with a new coach and going through that whole process."

Smorol was 4-4 his sophomore year for head coach Matt Cilento and 0-1 on the varsity his freshman campaign, splitting time between junior varsity and varsity.

"Being a front guy, he handled that very well," Kennedy said. "Rob gave us a chance to win every time he took the ball.

"That's all you can ask for at any level."

Smorol's pitching repertoire includes fastball, curveball and changeup. Kennedy is also helping him devise a cutter.

"Fastball is my No. 1 pitch, usually thrown at about 85-86 and topping out at 87," Smorol said. "This off-season I'm going to really work in the weight room a lot - on my legs and by doing shoulder exercises - hoping to at least throw my fastball two more miles an hour at 89 if I can."

"His strikeout-to-walk ratio was incredible," Kennedy said. "He didn't walk many guys.

"He really kind of embraced what I asked him to do. He went out there and attacked the strike zone. He doesn't give in on the mound."

Kennedy reported that Hill saw Smorol pitch at home against Union Catholic, which was Johnson's final game on May 29 in Clark. Smorol allowed three earned runs and four hits in six innings, striking out six and walking five in a 5-3 victory over the Vikings.

Smorol also beat Union Catholic 3-2 in Scotch Plains on May 14 for his fourth victory of the season. He allowed four hits in six innings, striking out 12 and walking two.

Greg Baker, who will also be a senior and will be Johnson's No. 2 pitcher next spring, pitched a scoreless seventh for the save.

"Every school is hoping to acquire a lefty," Kennedy said. "Rob has pretty good stuff and a lot more to give.

"He will continue to get stronger and down the road will throw harder. He'll be very successful at the next level."

"Coach Kennedy has helped me a lot with my pitching, pointing out different things," Smorol said, "He's also helped me a great deal with my swing and with colleges, being able to talk with different coaches."

Smorol, who has always batted right handed, hit .375 as a sophomore.

Last fall and this summer Smorol played for a traveling team called the New Jersey Terminators, who are out of Toms River and coached by Dean Mancini.

Other Union County players on the team this summer included Union residents Lou Clemente of Roselle Catholic and Matt Canales of Union Catholic, also lefty pitchers.

Clemente will be a junior at RC and Canales will be a senior at UC.

This fall, Smorol will participate on a team called Full Count Baseball. The coach is Matt Belford, who is the owner and director of programs for Full Count Baseball.

Belford was the head coach at Bloomfield College from 2001-2008 and is now an assistant coach at Montclair State University, where he earned a Masters Degree in physical education in 2003.

"We'll play most of our games at Williams Field in Elizabeth," Smorol said. "It's a showcase type of team, but there will be a lot of instruction.

"There will be a lot of college coaches and the practices will be like college practices. It should be pretty good."

NOTES: One of Smorol's best pitched games in 2008 was his third win of the year.

On May 3 at Union in the first round of the UCT, he threw six shutout innings and earned the victory in a 3-0 decision.

After Smorol had a high pitch count, Kennedy had sophomore lefty Rich Mullin come in and get the save in the seventh.

"Our goals next year are to win the county chamrionship and, ultimately, the state tournament," Smortl said

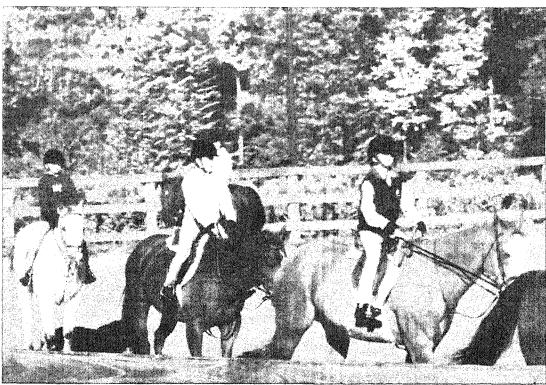

"We have a lot of seniors coming back."

Returning seniors include Smorol, Baker, Dan Dugan, Mark DiMaio and Matt Matlosz.

Johnson remains in Central Jersey, Group 2 for the 2009 season.

The Crusaders last reached the UCT championship game in 2002 when they were defeated by Westfield.

Elizbeth defeated Westfield 4-2 in this year's title game, winning the UCT for the first time since 1991.

A 'greener' alternative for local students

The new school year is fast approaching and so too is the time to stock up on pencils, notebooks, backpacks and printer cartridges.

While back to school expenses can get costly, Cartridge World in Union, a part of the world's fastest growing ink and toner refilling retailer, is offering a more affordable and environmentally-friendly alternative for students to stay "ahead of the curve" when it comes to ink cartridges.

Cartridge World is encouraging local back-to-schoolers to refill their existing ink cartridges rather than throw them away or buy brand new ones.

Customers can bring their empty ink and toner cartridges into a local store and have each refilled or swap out their cartridge for one that is ready to go.

In North America alone, more than 350 million cartridges are discarded in landfills, and that number increases by 12 percent annually. Switching to remanufactured eartridges not only keeps them out of the landfills, but also reduces carbon emissions by an estimated one million pounds per year and conserves half a gallon of oil for each laser cartridge that is reused recy-

Banners to benefit seniors

By Paul Greulich Staff Writer

CLARK — Westfield and Brant Avenues will be getting extra color thanks to a Chamber of Commerce initiative to sell and install street banners advertising local businesses.

These 30-by-60-inch sheets constructed of vinyl, which is sturdier than cloth, will be hung from telephone poles. Township businesses can order banners that feature their company's name or logo. Residents can expect to see them installed by the end of September. While the plan may be new to Clark, other municipalities in Union County, including Kenilworth and Springfield, have implemented a similar program, according to Kate Conroy, vice president of Gateway Regional Chamber of Commerce.

"The chamber thought it would be a nice way to beautify the streets and raise money for graduating seniors," she said.

A portion of the proceeds will go to the Clark Chamber Scholarship fund, as well as an event for local senior citizens known as the Senior Prom.

Businesses that have already ordered banners include Columbia Bank, A&M Jewelers, and the Allegiance Title Agency.

"We want to be invested in the community, and we feel there is no better way to display our support than through a banner," said Bruno Genova, owner, principal and attorney for Allegiance Title Agency, hich has been located in Clark for seven years.

Conroy said the effort is already successful. "We are almost at the minimum number that we need to sell, and they're going pretty quickly," she said.

Once requests for at least 25 banners have been received, the chamber will place the order.

The sale is no longer open to Clark Chamber of Commerce members, but non-members can still order by contacting Kate Conroy at 908-352-0900.

A Low-down Showdown in Higher Education

By Karen Miller

If this were grammar school, they'd be slugging it out in the playground.

A decision to change class scheduling at Kean University has sparked a war of words between the University's administration, and faculty and students opposed to the move.

The plan, scheduled to take effect with the spring 2009 semester, includes shortening class periods from 80 to 50 minutes and increasing the number of sessions each class would meet per week. Classes also would be held more frequently on Fridays and on Saturdays.

"Fixed costs remain the same regardless of the utilization rate of the buildings," said university spokesman Stephen Hudik. Fixed costs include maintenance, heating and similar operating expenses. "By flattening out the schedule and spreading classes more evenly, we can increase the number of classes offered and the number of students served."

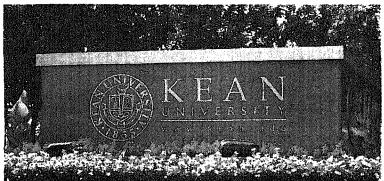

Under the current schedule most students attend classes only four days a week, allowing them three days for work and to perform internships required in many majors. Kean administration officials say the new plan, which includes more classes on Fridays and Saturdays, will allow the university to "fully utilize" buildings that currently see little use on certain days of the week, generate more revenue for the school by allowing it to offer more classes, and alleviate parking problems on the largely commuter campus.

However, spokesmen for the Kean Federation of Teachers disagree with the administration's conclusions. They suggest that the new schedules will make it difficult for students to balance class, internship and work schedules, increase the burden on adjunct professors who must drive to the campus more often, make it more difficult for full-time professors to handle non-teaching duties, and could actually increase costs and delay graduations rather than accelerate them, as the administration states.

"The administration's arguments in favor of the new schedule don't stand up to reason," said Charlie Kelly, chair of the negotiating committee for the teacher's federation and a member of the school's political science faculty since 1972. "The administration says the new schedule will bring in more tuition. But in fact, no additional classes have been scheduled. They are just spreading out the same number of classes over more days."

Kelly argues that class time is only

Time is running out for those who oppose a planned expansion of class schedules and related rule changes at Kean University, some of which take effect this fall. The University administration and faculty are embroiled in a war of words over the issue.

one part of a faculty member's duties and that the new rules will make it more difficult for teachers to perform non-teaching tasks.

"Faculty have to prepare to teach four three-hour classes per week, prepare and copy materials, write up assignments, grade papers, prepare and grade tests, supervise labs, supervise internships, and advise and meet with students," he said.

Research, grant writing and professional development such as conferences or work in off-campus research facilities also are an important part of a faculty member's work and would be made more difficult by the new schedule, Kelly argues.

"Faculty activity far exceeds a typical 40-hour work week," he said.

Kean officials counter that ensuring that all faculty members work a fulltime schedule is an issue.

"The vast majority of our faculty go above and beyond their contractual obligations toward the University and our students," the administration said through an issued statement.
(University officials other than Hudik declined to speak with Inside Business for this article.) "They already spend four to five days on campus. Our aim is to ensure that this is the case across the board and that faculty are available as required to both teach and counsel students on a full-time basis four days a week.

"Maintaining the status quo for a select group who enjoy two- or three-day work weeks with salary and benefits up to $160K a year is not sustainable or responsible to our students, the University and New Jersey taxpayers."

The changes come along with a tuition increase of 7.9 percent. The administration suggested that without

Finding Einstein in Union County

By Rod Hirsch

Sometime this school year, science teachers will introduce their students to the concept of symbiosis, an interdependent working relationship where every component involved benefits

It is unlikely the teachers will cite as example the alliances that have been built between public schools in Union County and the surrounding business community – although perhaps they should.

Corporations such as Merck, Schering-Plough, Infineum, Cogen Technologies, Ikea, Wakefern Supermarkets and others believe they have a proprietary interest in the academic achievements of students in Union County and have reached out to public school systems to help supplement curriculums, build and equip labs, provide instruction, mentor teachers and sponsor scholarship programs.

While the cause is worthy, the motivations are both altruistic and self-serving.

"Our partnership with public schools in Union County focuses primarily on science education," explained Joe Starkey, executive director of public affairs for Schering-Plough in Kenilworth. "We are a research-based company and it's in our interest to get young people interested in the study of science. If there are no science majors in college we won't have anyone to hire to do our research.

"We believe very much in giving back to the communities where we operate and where our employees live, it makes sense for us because it assists us in our mission."

"Gateway to Growth"

Customer knowledge is an active thing

By John L. Picard

A few years ago, I was at an awards ceremony for entrepreneurs. Upon accepting his award, a small business owner attributed his success to his commitment to each customer relationship. He spoke eloquently that he was able to succeed, where others hadn't, because the foundation of his business was everyone at his company had the ability to really know and be involved with each customer. This simple truth was a powerful reminder that it all comes down to connections built on insight.

George Carlin was right - We all collect data, numbers and information whether we like it or not. Whether the impetus is regulations, tax requirements, partners, internal reporting, or market research, we all gather 'stuff,' to quote the comedian, George Carlin, and often wonder why we do it.

Insights we use - Like the entrepreneur above, we do know, intuitively, that it is real knowledge that can make a difference with the customers who are the driving force of our business. We know that to get the most out of our customers and prospects, we need to transform the passive data, 'we have,' into the actionable insights, 'we use.'

Like your old journalism class - It is a little like the basic questions you may have learned in high school journalism. Each of us needs to understand the "who, what, when, where, how and why" of their customers and incorporate that knowledge into the tools and messages of business.

Four pillars to insight transformation - Insight is the act of thinking about and leveraging your information. Transformation is the change that comes from leveraging insight into action and results. There are four pillars, or insight components, that are built on this foundation.

Pillar One - Relevancy - Adapt the information in your customer dialogue so products, services, messages and offers are presented in the context of the customer need. Go beyond looking simply at the last transaction or some field in a database and determine the sense of importance, weight and bearing your value has on the customer's life.

all your relationship channels and marketing tools.

Pillar Two - Context - Change your conversation to incorporate previous behaviors and the customer's true underlying needs, today. This is the opportunity to incorporate history, circumstances and the overall market environment into

Pillar Three - Timing - Use knowledge to hone the timing of your offer, contact style and medium. Knowledge of customer timing can drive you to a better window of opportunity, different messages about urgency, alternative ways to reach the prospect and to incorporate factors such as seasonality and cycles of customer needs.

Pillar Four - Emotions - Within the cold, hard facts of customer data lay insights that touch the human emotions that connect to motivation and commitment. We need to know the level, or 'heat index' (intense, casual or unemotional) of these emotional cues and incorporate them into our communications. Additionally, we need to mirror and appeal to the emotional characteristics hidden beneath the customer information. Below surface facts, buying history and demographics are intangibles like: trust, commitment, loyalty, hope and need.

Four pillars - One integrated picture - Each pillar is part of a whole 'knowledge construct' that is supported by all the other pillars. They work together to create a single perception this is more than the sum of each of the parts. When taken together, you gain a picture you might never have seen had you looked only at a single aspect.

Turn transformation into opportunity - Bottom line: Step back and use the customer insight you already have, but often take for granted, to form strategies and action that is centered on customer perspective and a sense of relationship ownership throughout your business.

Finding Einstein in Union County

Lois Bass is an administrative assistant at Infineum in Linden who works closely with the company's student outreach programs.

"We really want to encourage students to pursue a career in science," she said. "They are our future and we need to make sure the workforce has qualified people to carry on business.

"We do career days with Linden and other high schools in Union County and include colleges and universities so that students can see what disciplines there are, what work is involved and how a career can develop."

Perhaps no company embraces the symbiotic concept more than pharmaceutical giant Merck, headquartered in Rahway,

The Merck Institute for Science Education (MISE) recently concluded the first of a three-year program, The Academy for Leadership in Science Instruction, designed to improve science instructional practice within public schools in New Jersey and Pennsylvania.

The Academy will provide nearly 120 teachers and principals from 22 schools with opportunities to deepen their knowledge and develop effective leadership skills to improve science instructional practice and science curriculum and assessment in their

"We have a science culture here, and when we talk science in the district we're talking the Merck Institute," said Dolores Maslo, director of science for the Linden Public Schools. "Over the years they've supplied everything from materials to professional development training of our teachers."

Schering-Plough also sponsors a summer institute for elementary, middle and high school science teachers in which teachers are invited to work in the company's labs for a four-week period alongside company scientists and researchers. Starkey estimated 75 teachers have "graduated" from the summer institute.

"Each one touches about 125 students in a given year and others indirectly," he said. "We're really creating a link between the schools and what they see in a laboratory."

Schering also refurbished all the science labs in the David Brearley Middle and High School in Kenilworth before it reopened 12 years ago and paid to design and install a multi-discipline science lab in Union High School in the late 1990s.

This symbiotic relationship between the schools and the business community encompasses their mutual partnerships, as well, according to Don Goncalves, assistant board secretary for the Elizabeth School District.

"One of our greatest partners is the Gateway Regional Chamber of Commerce," he said. "They are our key liaison to many of the businesses in Union County. Through the chamber businesses get their issues heard as it relates to job preparedness and workforce development

"We're one of the raw suppliers of human resource capital in Union County and it's important for us to have an understanding from business as to what qualifications and actual abilities youth need today to compete in the business environment.'

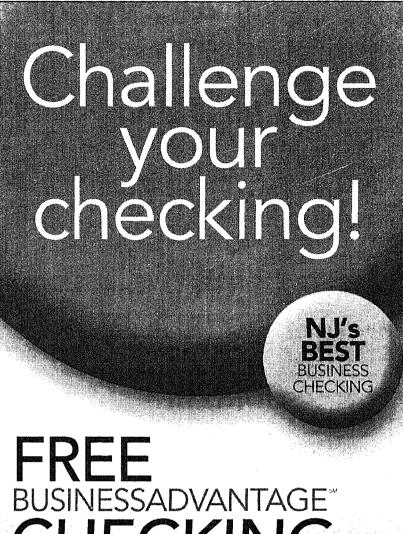

Infineum has had a strong working relationship with the Linden Schools for several generations, according to Maslo and Bass. Since 2000, the company has paid for consultants from Montclair University and the New Jersey Audubon Society to train its

"Infineum has helped with our environmental education programs," Maslo said. "They provide money for consultants to come in and train K-8 teachers in outdoor inquiries, enhancing their general problem solving skills in science."

Maslo has been working for six years to preserve and protect the Hawk Rise wetlands in Linden and build a walkway around the perimeter of the estuary. Infinium has helped with that initiative. Similarly, Schering-Plough has funded the environmental programs of the Union County 4-H summer camp.

Wakefern, the parent company of ShopRite supermarkets, stocks, supplies and supervises a small market on the campus of the Vocational and Technical High school in Elizabeth, an on-the-job training facility that is staffed by students who are taught such real-life jobs skills as customer service, inventory control and running a business from the ground up, according to Goncalves.

"A vital economy and an engaged business community are important for our school district," he said. "They provide jobs for parents and the kids who attend our schools and help enrich the community.'

Nondiscretionary Bonuses - Staff Satisfaction and a Return on Investment

By Connie Brennan

There is an art to giving bonuses. It covers what is given, how it is given, when it is given and how the amount is determined.

What many administrators do not understand is that there are two types of bonuses – discretionary and nondiscretionary. People tend to blend them, but it is important to keep them separate, because they have different effects on staff.

The discretionary bonus is given at the pleasure of the employer, and it is a show of appreciation, an after-the-fact acknowledgement for a job well done. The nondiscretionary bonus is promised before the fact and is given only if specific goals or objectives are

Of the two, the nondiscretionary bonus is the better approach because it carries an incentive to do more than what is required.

How to be Nondiscretionary

To set up a nondiscretionary bonus system, the employer first has to assign specific goals that can be measured. To ensure the best payoff for the firm, set the goals at three levels – for each individual, each department or team and the office as a whole. Base them on what management wants to see happen and things that will take everybody beyond the basic requirements of their jobs.

The bonus amounts are set by a scorecard of the three levels put together. To coordinate it all, let senior management set the company goals, then ask the departments to decide on what they can do to achieve them and what each staffer's contribution should be.

Suppose senior management sets a goal of increasing revenues by X percent. The billing department might say it can help by setting a goal of getting a certain number of bills submitted every day. It might then set a goal for Staffer A to get all the bills out by the end of each week.

The Three-Way Score

To determine who gets what money, decide on the amount the firm can give and set a percentage potential for each of the three levels.

For example, suppose the firm decides it can give a possible $1,000 bonus to each staffer. It might set the percentage potentials so that:

- · Each staffer's individual performance can earn up to 80 percent of that amount, or $800;
- The department or team performance can earn up to 20 percent, or $200;
- And the sum of the two will be multiplied by the firm's success percentage.

So if Staffer A achieves 100 percent of her or his personal goals, she or he gets 100 percent of the potential $800. And if the department achieves 100 percent of its goals, Staffer A gets $200 added to that.

Then multiply the total of those two by the firm's performance percentage.

Thus, if it's been a great year and the firm has met its goals by 150 percent, the $1,000 gets multiplied by 150 percent, and Staffer A gets not $1,000 but $1,500.

It also is possible to give a staffer or department two or three goals and score the outcome by the number of goals reached. That way, if Staffer A has three goals and achieves only two of them, the score is 66 percent, and the calculation goes on from there.

Beware of Overtime

The caveat in setting goals is to watch out for overtime pay. The firm can lose the financial benefit of bonuses if reaching the goals requires overtime. If so, the office will wind up paying overtime plus the bonus amount.

If done correctly, nondiscretionary bonuses can generate improvements in staff performance and give a company a better bottom line. By contrast, a thank-you with no requirements attached does little to drive performance.

A Low-down Showdown in Higher Education

the changes this increase would be even greater.

"We chose the option that best preserves our mission," the statement continues. "The alternate would require a double digit increase in tuition that would be devastating to our students, causing many to postpone or forego their studies. Our students are especially vulnerable to increased costs and do not have contractual protections, including wage increases."

One student who opposes the changes is Gema Castaneda, a senior social work major. Castaneda and several other students organized a petition against the revised schedule and collected more than 2,000 signatures.

"Social work requires field work, an internship one to two times a week," she said. "It is difficult to work full time, take classes and handle the internship. If we have to be on campus five days a week instead of four it will be more difficult."

Other students, however, approve of the new schedule. About a dozen students made favorable comments about the proposed changes in the July 21 online edition of The Cougar's Byte, one of the school newspapers.

However, the University's Council of Concerned Faculty charged that "under the guise of being a 'student' newspaper, The Cougar's Byte was created by the administration who objected to negative or critical stories written in the independent paper, The Tower, so that it could control information distributed to students. You will never find anything critical of the administration in the Cougar's Byte. Its purpose is public relations, not news."

While most of the scheduling changes will not take effect until spring, in May the administration announced new scheduling rules effective this fall. The new rules were announced shortly after a May 5 demonstration against the new schedule was held by faculty and students. Kelly and other faculty members consider these new rules "punitive."

According to Kelly, one of the new rules states that, effective in September, no professor can teach more than two sections of the same class.

"This change was made after the students had made their fall schedules," he said.
"Often there is no other person available to teach that third class, which must now be dropped from the schedule."

Kelly was unable to say how many courses will be dropped this fall because of the rules change, or how many students would be affected. However, he claimed that many of the dropped classes had full registration.

"How is this saving money? Dropping classes that are full?" he asked.

Kelly also maintained that if students cannot attend the classes they need at the right time it can delay their graduation, requiring they stay in school longer and forcing them to pay more in tuition.

"The University does not have a response to the allegations" regarding the changes for the fall schedule, according to Hudik.

"Our goal with the schedule change is to ensure that Kean University continues its mission as an affordable institution of higher education for students," according to the issued statement. "To that end, the University looked at ways to best utilize its resources in an era of declining state funding, uncertainty of future levels of support and increases in our fixed costs.

"Student access to full-time faculty in and outside the classroom for academic counseling, mentoring and related activities is an essential part of the educational process. Effective scheduling provides better access for our students to classes and academic support services from our faculty.

"The schedule change is not a quick fix but an effort to address a long-term problem: how to keep higher education affordable for our students. We developed the new schedule after reviewing a number of options and receiving input from many constituencies, including students and faculty."

Expanding the Benefits of Membership

The benefits of membership in the Gateway Regional Chamber of Commerce have just gotten better - literally. Peggy Baffoni has joined the Gateway staff as special projects coordinator with the charge of strengthening the services the Chamber provides to members in the areas of employee administration and benefits.

Baffoni also will provide Gateway members with enhanced events planning and management activities

Baffoni steps into the Gateway Chamber from a career path that ideally tailored her for the duties of her new position, having passed through the varied fields of project management, management training, recruiting and sales. Along the way she became a voracious networker and owned a company that specialized in business process redesign strategies for retailers.

Among her stops was a seven-year stint at Sandler Sales Institute, the highly respected sales training franchise, where she worked closely with founder David Sandler on the institute's Strategic Sales Management Program®.

"I was a recognized producer at Prudential Financial and thought I knew how to sell," Baffoni said. "Then came Sandler. I was so fortunate to have had David Sandler as a mentor."

From there Baffoni moved into the world of PEOs - professional employer organization that provide employee benefits and administration services to companies. There she garnered the expertise that she plans to use in her new position with the Gateway to help members maximize the benefits they receive from their association - through direct service from the Chamber to interconnection with one another and new members.

"I spent seven years working in employee administration learning about the value this model brings to the mid-sized to large businesses," she said. "I also realized there was an even bigger audience out there - small businesses."

Baffoni intends to help members fully realize all their options - both in the arena of employee administration but also in the benefits of chamber membership. She will do this through direct interaction with members and through an expansion of Gateway events. She plans to take that already extensive calendar and bring it to a new level, introducing such new additions as professional services events and education seminars.

It is all about connecting members and services, Baffoni claims.

"The objective is to have a good understanding of our members' business needs - what do they have to offer, how do they make money, what is their perfect customer profile - and put the pieces together," she said. "My goal is to add value to any meeting and orchestrate the solutions through Gateway members. In doing that, I become a resource - a resource that connects the dots.

In the area of employee administration and benefits, those dots will be the varied companies that comprise the Gateway and the service providers that offer this expertise.

"For those businesses that do not fit within the PEO model we are creating a network within the association of all those players," said Baffoni, who sees her role as that of a conduit of information. "The vision is to make sure that all our members are whole in their employee administration needs."

That vision will apply to all members, regardless of their size. Baffoni notes that many smaller companies often do not consider themselves candidates for the benefits of employee administration assistance even though they in fact are.

"I've worked with Fortune 200 companies, so I have a pretty good background of businesses understanding," she said. "I also understand that small business have the same concerns as larger companies. It's good to serve as a voice in the Gateway that looks at the smaller players and levels out the playing field as if they were larger and at the same time helps the larger players do what they do well by creating better programs."

Widening the pool of services also will be an aim for Baffoni.

"We also want to attract new members that have favorable offerings for existing members," she said. "Anyone can join the Gateway and become a resource."

Baffoni is committed to connecting all those resources and widening the benefits of memberships for all those within the Gateway.

"We are really excited to have someone of Peggy's caliber joining our staff," said Jim Coyle, Gateway president. "She has a tremendous background in employee benefits and "We are confident Peggy will really help fill out the services and benefits we provide our members. As a chamber of commerce, our job is to provide tangible benefits to our members that directly effect their business operation. With Peggy, these services and benefits are going to get even stronger than they are now."

Merck Institute for Science Education

Launches Three-Year Program to Improve Science Teaching in New Jersey and Pennsylvania Public Schools

With a $38 million commitment by Merck & Co., Inc., Merck Institute for Science Education (MISE) was founded in 1993 as a nonprofit organization dedicated to improving science education from kindergarten through the 12th grade and influencing education policy. During the past 15 years, MISE has become a model for how corporations can support the nation's STEM (science, technology, engineering, mathematics) education objectives and make a lasting difference in education reform by committing to long-term partnerships focused on the specific goals of:

- · Developing and delivering research-based professional development opportunities to enhance teacher knowledge and skills
- · Providing access to high-quality curriculum materials and resources
- · Building communities within a school that are committed to strengthening science teaching and learning within and across schools and school districts "The Academy for Leader- Promoting local, state and national policies that support effective science within public schools in New Jersey and ship in Science Instruction offers educators a unique education experience to come together MISE has launched its latest initiative, to build a vision of effective "The Academy for Leadership in Science science instruction in our Instruction," a new three-year program to improve science instructional practice public schools."

"The Academy for Leadership in Science

Pennsylvania.

Instruction offers educators a unique experience to come together to build a vision of effective science instruction in our public schools," said Dr. Carlo Parrayano, executive director, MISE. "Participants will bring back to their schools this fall new experiences and professional relationships that will help improve their teaching of science and that can help improve student performance. Strong science education in our schools is essential for the economic development and well-being of our communities. MISE is proud to have an opportunity to collaborate with such a committed team of educators during the inaugural launch of the Academy."

In mid-August, nearly 120 teachers and principals from 22 schools within the school districts of Elizabeth, Hillside, Linden, Rahway and Readington Township, New Jersey, and North Penn, Pennsylvania, participated in the first annual five-day residential Academy, Over three consecutive years, Academy participants will also attend many more training sessions that will provide opportunities for educators to deepen their knowledge and develop effective leadership skills to improve science instructional practice, science curriculum and science assessment in their schools.

The Academy is a natural next step for MISE and is an outgrowth of the work the Institute is already doing in developing professional learning communities in and among schools and districts. Throughout the past 15 years, MISE has developed a partnership with the six districts that are participating in the Academy, primarily around professional development and improving student achievement in science.

MISE has made a significant impact on the character of teaching and learning science in its partner school districts, according to research performed. Analysis of student performance on standardized tests by the Consortium for Policy Research in Education found that students receiving science instruction from teachers who participated in MISE professional development activities over several years outperformed students whose teachers had only one or no years of MISE training. In 2006, MISE was included as a best practice in "Innovation America-Building a Science, Technology, Engineering and Math Agenda," published by the National Governors Association.

Moxie, the Festering Sores and Selling

By Andy Gole

Part I - The Moxie Test - the introduction

Many prospects want to know that you have moxie – gumption – before they will buy. So they give you the moxie test.

Prospects challenge you; perhaps give you a hard time. They want to know that you will take a stand, defend your position. If you don't believe in your product, why should the prospect?

and, detend your position. It you don't believe in your product, why should the prospect?

As much as 20 percent of the prospects who challenge you are willing to be persuaded to buy.

Prospects challenge you...They want to know that you will take a stand, defend your position. If you don't believe in your product, why should the prospect?

The question is: which 20 percent?

We don't know. So we need to take a stand 100 out of 100 times – all the time. We need to pass the moxie test.

Moxie has a second benefit, with respect to the "festering sores."

Part II -

The Story of the Festering Sores Festering sores – apparently unsolvable

problems – afflict everyone. These problems gnaw at prospects over time. The prospect may initially search for a solution, but eventually gives up. The sores have transformed into calluses on the soul, an accepted "cost of doing business."

Some sores are just nuisances. Others are ticking time bombs, with potentially severe consequences. Frequently these sores lead to unnecessary, but accepted, costs of substantial underperformance.

The prospect would act decisively to correct the sore given a clear path. But since they don't believe a simple enough path exists, they aren't even searching for a solution. It's just a cost of doing business – until a crisis erupts.

It doesn't have to happen this way if salespeople do their job.

Consider this common festering sore: the PDA. A businessman had a miserable experience with his PDA for the two years he was under contract. The device crashed frequently and he often would spend an hour or more on the phone with customer service for advice, followed by stopgap solutions and continued inferior service.

He reached out, tentatively, to a few other vendors, but their promises of great customer service seemed hollow. He decided to stay with the "devil he knew."

The sore continued to fester.

If a salesperson had reached out to him at any time with a convincingly reliable device, he would have jumped at the opportunity. But no one reached out,

And the sore continued to fester.

Until one day, the device ceased working. He was forced back into search mode. Again, with trepidation, he approached a new vendor, very skeptical, but with serious intent. Not only did he find a solution that got him up and running within 1-½ hours — he wound up cutting his costs in half. Festering sores often blind us to exploring substantially improved offers.

Part III - Moxie - and the festering sores

We have to exhibit moxie all the time – to pass the moxie test – because prospects will challenge us all the time. But moxie offers this bonus: we reach vast numbers of prospects with festering sores. There are legions of them, not ready to make the first move.

It's not the prospect's job to bare festering sores in public. It's our job as salespeople to make it easy for prospects to know there is a solution. This puts the prospect into search mode. Moxie is a positive two-edged sword. When salespeople do their job, prospects realize they don't have to endure the festering sores.

Absence of Life Skills Education Doesn't Add Up

I recently came across an article about college students falling prey to unscrupulous credit card companies. Credit card companies use all kind of enticements like free food, T-shirts and music downloads to capture the attention of the unwary well educated college student. Then BOOM, they're signing their lives away using credit to fill their every need and want. It is absolutely vicious.

lim Coyle

Much the same can be said about the subprime mortgage debacle. Here the unwary homeowner wannabes were enticed by foolishly cheap mortgages to buy much more house than they ever could afford. Well, when the fine print was understood, BAM, it was like being hit between the eyes.

Mortgage payments skyrocket. People can't pay. Housing values drop. We have a crisis that threatens the wellbeing of our economy.

How can so many people be so stupid?

Some blame the avarice of banks and mortgage companies. Some blame the greed and dishonesty of buyers. Some say it is symptomatic of the times; people want more than they can afford, they want it now, and they are willing to incur debt they can't afford to get it.

Really the blame belongs right at the feet of our public schools.

Schools no longer teach life skills. The art of balancing a checkbook or calculating interest payments on a loan or a savings account are something school children are rarely exposed to these days.

As an undergraduate I had a major in economics and minors in math and computer science. In graduate school my master's degree was in mathematical economics and quantitative analysis. I did a lot of math in school.

However, I can't remember the last time I integrated an equation or performed a regression. Now I do functional math – everyday. I balance checkbooks. I calculate costs and earnings. I evaluate interest rates. I make decisions on whether to buy or lease. I make budgets that let me know what I can afford, and what I can't. And this is at home, not the office.

Living in today's world takes a lot of sophistication. Just trying to figure out which cell phone plan best fits my needs is extremely challenging.

The skills to do this analysis use to be taught in school, starting in middle school and continuing in high school. I know I'm showing my age here, but back when I was in school there were classes in home economics and basic business and accounting that everyone took. Also, in the regular math classes many of the problems, especially the hated word problems, dealt with calculations that were basic life skills.

This unfortunately is no longer the case. Schools for the most part have eliminated these kinds of classes. Outside groups, like Junior Achievement, try hard to fill the void but they can't really replace a class that meets daily, and even in the schools where they have programs they touch only a few. In many school districts these outside groups are not even welcome as they detract from the "college preparation" focus of current curriculums.

So we end up with kids that have no idea how credit works. They have no idea how to formulate or stick to a budget. They can be misled by any fast-talking salesman into signing up for crushing debt. And when aggregated, they can have a crushing impact on the economy, as we have seen with the subprime mortgage crisis.

MISSION STATEMENT

"The Gateway Regional Chamber of Commerce is a business organization which represents and advances the business interests of its members"

Where the Chamber Stands...

Finding Out What You Want to Be When You Grow Up

Do an online search for high school internship and shadow programs in New Jersey and prepare to be disappointed. It is slim pickings, to say the least.

You will find reference to a few national internship programs for specific disciplines, such as visual arts, architecture or the dairy industry. There are high school mentoring programs going on in New York, Delaware and Colorado, as well as isolated shadow programs identified by individual New Jersey schools.

But you will be hard pressed to find broad-based high school-business internship and shadow programs within the state that might allow the business community to help prepare the next generation of workers and teachers or high school administrators to better prepare their students for life in the workplace after graduation.

JerseyIntern.com defines an internship as, "Placement with an organization primarily to gain work experience, learn about the nature of that work, acquire skill and knowledge in doing that work, and acquire contacts that can assist in getting a job and building a career."

Student Shadow programs are "informal arrangements between schools and businesses that give students the opportunity to explore the workplace," according to CareersPrep.com. "Businesses allow one or more students to follow employees around during the business day, observing, asking questions and taking part in planned hands-on activities."

The benefit of these programs is twofold. Students are given firsthand experience in the workplace while also getting a taste of potential career options. Businesses are able to give back to the community they serve while also sowing the seeds for a potential future employment pool.

There are wonderful programs in place in Union County. Infineum of Linden each year hosts "Youth Day" for the children of employees as a way of getting them interested in science and Wakefern stocks and supervises a small market on the campus of the Vocational and Technical High school in Elizabeth to provide on-the-job training for students. Merck, Schering-Plough, Cogen Technologies and Ikea all partner with local school districts to offer ongoing opportunities for high school teachers and administrators to improve their skills as a way of better preparing the next generation of employees.

Yet these programs often are geared for educators or are very narrowly available rather than serving as general guidance for a broad population of high school students.

The Gateway Regional Chamber of Commerce sponsors the Educator Institute, a four-day program through which the chamber exposes Union County teachers to the many jobs available in the workplace that require a variety of skills and training but not necessarily a college degree. Each day the teachers visit different businesses where they see first-hand the important functions these workers serve for both their employers and the local economy. Each year only between 20 and 25 teachers avail themselves of this program, yet up to 50 or more could be accommodated.

Part of the explanation for the dearth of on-site business internship and shadow programs is the litigious nature of our society. Sending students to a workplace requires removing them from the school and having them travel, thereby incurring added liability for a school district. That is an understandable concern, but certainly not one that cannot be resolved. Of greater concern – urgency even – should be the responsibility of the educational system for preparing students for entry into the work world.

Not all high school students go to college – in New Jersey in 2006, only 33.4 percent of all adults over the age of 25 held a bachelor's degree, according to the U.S. Census bureau. And of the occupations projecting the fastest growth rate between 2006 and 2016, three of the top five do not require a bachelor's degree and two require no associate degree, according to the U.S. Department of Labor.

The state's school systems should be working with the business community to prepare today's high school students for the choices they will face after graduation, and giving them a better taste of what flavors those choices will carry.

After all, what better way for 17-year-olds to find out if veterinary, home health care or telecommunication technology is for them than by spending time in those workplaces side by side with those who have made career choices before them?

It is time for everyone — students, school systems and businesses — to get to work in preparing today's youth for tomorrow's workday.

Congressman Frank LoBiondo (R-02)

A Wealth of Opportunity in South Jersey

New Jersey's economic outlook is challenging. Small businesses are continually crushed by burdensome regulations and excessive local and state taxes. Multinational corporations, once thriving locally, have packed up operations and relocated to more business-friendly jurisdictions out of state.

With congestion in many parts of our state and a shortage of readily-available qualified employees, there isn't a compelling case for entrepreneurs or established businesses to look to many parts of New Jersey for opportunity and growth.

Unless, of course, they look toward South Jersey.

Previously only thought of for its manufacturing and agricultural sectors, the explosion of diverse industries, including healthcare, aviation, tourism and entertainment, have encouraged investors and business leaders to take a second look at South Jersey.

The region has some exciting projects in the works that should be a serious consideration for any business looking for new opportunities. One major facility - the New Jersey Motorsports Park in Millville - recently opened to an enthusiastic reception and promising future. With more than 700 acres of planned racing tracks, restaurants, hotel rooms and meeting space, there is ample opportunity for additional investment and business development in a region that is seeing increased visitor traffic.

In neighboring Atlantic County, there is considerable buzz around the upcoming groundbreaking of the planned Aviation Research & Technology Park. The Park will provide an environment where advanced concepts in aviation research can be explored by engineers, computer scientists, mathematicians and air traffic controllers to advance the modernization and protection of our national airspace system and increase airspace and airport capacity. Adjacent to the William J. Hughes Federal Aviation Administration Technical Center and the Atlantic City International Airport, this joint venture with the Richard Stockton College, Atlantic County Government and the South Jersey Economic Development District will bring an estimated 2,000 jobs and $80 million in private investment to the region.

While these projects clearly diversify South Jersey's economic base, it should not be inferred that the region has deserted its historical roots. Quite the opposite. With 45 percent of the state's farm lands, South Jersey was the only logical home for the unique partnership of Rutgers University and local farmers known as the Food Innovation Center. Located in Bridgeton, this economic development accelerator program provides business and technology expertise – from market research and product development to workforce training and quality assurance - to small and mid-sized food companies across New Jersey.

I was pleased to secure the initial federal funding needed to break ground on the project, and strongly believe the Rutgers' Food Innovation Center will be a partner in reaching food and agribusinesses not only in New Jersey, but throughout the nation.

Similarly, the sectors of tourism and gaming remain critical to the future of South Jersey and the state's overall economic growth. With nearly $10 billion in planned casino expansions in the pipeline, Atlantic City's casinos continue to draw tens of millions of visitors annually to their gaming floors, luxury shops, first-class spas and top performance venues.

Likewise, the shore communities along Atlantic and Cape May counties continue to be equally attractive to visitors and residents. With a reliable consumer base, both sectors provide additional opportunities for new businesses to enter the market,

While South Jersey provides a wealth of opportunity for new business ventures or expansions of existing companies, it also holds significant job potential for residents and those looking to relocate. Projects like the Aviation Research Park and Food Innovation Center will create thousands of high-wage jobs for the region and I've been proud to partner on these and similar investments in South Jersey's future.

I strongly believe that government does not create jobs, but that it creates opportunities for economic growth and prosperity. New Jersey must stop being an obstacle to business through excessive regulations and taxation. In order for our residents and our economy to thrive, we must foster the wealth of opportunity, not squander it.

Insight Are Presidential Nominating Conventions Still Relevant?

By Dr. Howard Rubin, Professor of Political Science, Kean University

The relevance of presidential nominating conventions has, until at least 1980, been widely accepted. Our major political parties exist primarily to select and elect candidates to public

Since there are a multitude of such offices at the state and local levels, there are vibrant parallel political party structures. At the national level, the only election is that of the President (and Vice President). Hence, parties have a national committee, with representation from each state, a national chairman and limited staff. That is about it

The conventions have been the sole legitimating national venue at which delegates from various states come together and select a presidential candidate.

There have always been differences on various policy issues - and candidate selection between state organizations contained within the national parties. The conventions, more or less successfully, were a venue for party leaders to play a mediating role, including the adoption of a national platform.

Up to the 1970s there were many states in which certain party leaders - bosses, if you prefer the term - controlled most if not all of their state's delegates. The ability to "deliver" a delegation, en masse, to a chosen candidate was certainly relevant to backroom brokering

Do conventions remain relevant? We still have a federal system in which state parties dominate. The differences from state to state within parties remain. With regard to "bosses," the situation has drastically changed. Under current rules, elected delegates, through primaries and caucuses, are pledged to their respective candidates at the time of their election. Differing viewpoints will, by convention time, have already been reflected in the composition of elected delegates.

So why not a simple vote count?

The last year in which there was true uncertainty as to the nominee at a convention was 1976. Yet in 2008 we came rather close to having a Democratic Convention convene without either Sen. Obama or Sen. Clinton clearly being a presumptive nominee

Rules, as noted, call for the large majority of delegates to be elected. Democratic rules also call for proportional representation in each state's elected delegate allocation. Hence, it is difficult in a tight race for any candidate to overwhelm the other in overall delegate count.

Additionally, delegates pledged to a third and/or other candidate who drops out are free to vote for anyone else. Moreover, approximately 20 percent of the Democratic delegates are "superdelegates," party leaders who are appointed, not elected, and do not have to pledge support to any candidate.

It was quite possible that the Obama-Clinton race would be decided, at the Convention, by yotes of unpledged superdelegates and John Edwards' supporters. There was enough uncertainty for long enough to argue for the potential future relevance of conventions.

Prevailing logic had been that nomination contests would not stay that close that long. Prevailing logic was wrong - and could be again. Although the Republican Party does not generally use proportional representation, the other points noted as to delegate selection are essentially relevant to them, as well.

Polling has shown that large elements of the public do not focus on the presidential race until the conventions. They remain a focal point for capturing public awareness. The conventions also remain the single comprehensive coming together for party activists on a national scale.

It is hopeful for the candidates that they return home energized for the fall campaign. Only at the conventions do the national parties physically come together to legitimize and fulfill their most important reason for existence - nominating and seeking to elect a President of the United States.

Presidential nominating conventions are no longer routinely what they used to be. Nevertheless, the roles they clearly do play, and sometimes might play, are sufficient that, if they did not exist, we would have to invent something very much like them.

Trinitas Hospital Launches Occupational Medicine Center

Offers full range of workplace exams and medical programs

Anew, freestanding service for employers – Occupational Medicine at Trinitas Hospital – is now available for the care of occupational injuries and illnesses. Located on the main campus of Trinitas Hospital, the center conducts pre-placement, annual and DOT/ICC exams and medical surveillance programs designed to meet the particular needs of companies and organizations for their workforces.

Among the center's many services are drug and alcohol testing with services of a certified Medical Review Officer (MRO) available on site. Also offered are pharmacy services, radiology, laboratory, physical and occupational therapy services, vision screening, hearing conservation services, pulmonary function testing and immunizations. Ergonomics and back injury prevention are key components of a work-conditioning program that is offered to help reduce the risk of recurrent injuries and improve job performance.

Explained Glenn Nacion, vice president of human resources at Trinitas Hospital, "Occupational Medicine at Trinitas Hospital offers full, 24-hour bilingual support to area employers for all of their employee health needs."

"Our staff is fully versed in providing excellent episodic and preventive occupational health care for companies in Union County and surrounding areas," noted medical director Robert Beswick MD, MPH. Dr. Beswick is Board Certified in occupational medicine and internal medicine, and has more than two decades of experience in the development and implementation of high quality occupational medicine programs throughout the state.

To learn more about Occupational Medicine at Trinitas Hospital, call 908.994.5368.

The Inside Look...

Elizabeth Public Schools has been chosen as one of only three school districts in the nation to be part of a $4 million grant program to improve Hispanic student access to higher education and degrees in science, technology, engineering and math (STEM). The grant program is sponsored by a new alliance between Merck & Co., Inc., and the National Alliance for Hispanic Health, and is called the Alliance/Merck Ciencia Scholars Program. The program was made possible through a $4-million grant from The Merck Company Foundation and the Alliance will work with the Merck Institute for Science Education for implementation.

During the next five years the program will provide 50 high school students from Elizabeth and two other school districts with $42,500 each in college scholarship and internship support to pursue STEM degrees. In addition, 125 Hispanic college students nationwide will receive $2,000 scholarships.

The Elizabeth Board of Education and Superintendent Pablo Muñoz were among five school board-superintendent teams nationwide chosen to participate in a two-year national program that focuses on school board policy best practices. The program, called "Reform Governance in Action," trains the nation's most promising reform-minded school boards and superintendents to become effective, high-performing teams.

Northfield Bank has announced that Eileen Yeagle has joined the bank as assistant vice president/mortgage servicing manager. Most recently Yeagle was head of operations for WarehouseOne, LLC, a subsidiary of Sterling Eagle Mortgage. She attended Somerset County College and is a New Jersey Licensed Title Producer and a New Jersey Licensed Notary.

Previously, Northfield announced that

Diane Senerchia was named program director of Northfield Bank Foundation, which supports nonprofit organizations operating in the communities in which Northfield Bank does business. Prior to joining the Northfield Bank Foundation, Senerchia was vice president of institutional marketing and sales for Merrill Lynch.

The Board of Trustees of Trinitas Hospital has announced that the institution's name has been changed to Trinitas Regional Medical Center to reflect the status of Trinitas as a regional healthcare provider and the broad range of services available at the facility, according to Gary Horan, FACHE, president and chief executive officer.

In 2007 Trinitas admitted more than 17,000 patients, treated more than 60,000 emergencies and provided more than 300,000 outpatient treatments. In addition to two major Elizabeth campuses, Trinitas has a healthcare presence throughout the state with nearly 100 locations. In addition, with a staff of more than 2,400 employees and a medical staff of close to 500 physicians, Trinitas Regional Medical Center is one of the largest employers in Central New Jersey.

John LaPilusa, CPA, of Fazio, Mannuzza, Roche, Tankel, LaPilusa, LLC, in Springfield was appointed by the Sisters of St. Joseph of Peace Health Care System Corp. as a trustee and treasurer of the Cusack Care Center at St. Joseph's Home for the Blind for the fiscal year July 1, 2008-June 30, 2009.

Commerce Bank recently announced the recipients of its annual American Dream Scholarship program, which awards $1,000 to local graduating seniors who achieve both academic excellence and serve the community.

In Union County, Commerce Bank awarded scholarships to: Elie Bochner of Springfield; Arshiya Fazal of New Providence; Melissa Gutworth and Ryan Richstein of Colonia; Elena Lopez of Mountainside; Loralyn Sarabia of Clark; Andrew Tsai of Berkeley Heights; and Ryan Zimmerman of Cranford.

The American Dream Scholarships Program awarded scholarships to 225 community service-oriented high school seniors within the bank's market area. Commerce donated $225,000 in scholarships this year.

Commercial real estate brokers Doug Richter and Ian Grusd and have teamed with Sperry Van Ness, one of the largest commercial real estate brokerage firms, to expand the firm's presence in the New Jersey market. Richter and Grusd will serve as managing directors and principal directors.

O.Berk Company of Union has acquired AQL Decorating Company of Fairview, a company with which it has done business for four decades. O.Berk provides plastic, glass and metal container decorations; AQL specializes in screen printing, labeling, hot stamping and pad printing. O.Berk was AQL's first customer nearly 42 years ago and the two companies share many clients, according to Mark Gaelen, O.BERK president and CEO. AQL will continue to operate as an independent company.

Science Education a Priority for Schering-Plough Corporation

Company Supports Hands-On Educational Opportunities for Teachers, Students

Science is at the center of everything Schering-Plough Corporation does. As a research oriented healthcare company, Schering-Plough places a high priority on supporting science education through a variety of philanthropic efforts.

It funds educational programs that encourage young, talented people to pursue careers in research, science and medicine and that promote diversity in science education and the increase of minority representation in the pharmaceutical and health care industries. The company also seeks to enhance the quality of science education and motivate youngsters to become the scientists of tomorrow.

One long-running community outreach effort is the Summer Institute for Teachers, coordinated by the company's research and development arm, Schering-Plough Research Institute (SPRI). Each year, teachers from Union County schools are selected to attend, based on recommendations from their school district's science curriculum supervisors. The program affords teachers a unique opportunity to learn first-hand about how commercial pharmaceutical labs operate.

During four weeks every July, teachers work alongside scientists from different research areas and experience how lab experiments are conducted. They gain insight into such topics as general toxicology, pathology, drug metabolism and others.

Feedback from teachers who have attended the Summer Institute over the 14 years of its existence has been consistently and enthusiastically positive. Both seasoned veterans and novice teachers describe the program as a thought-provoking way to translate scientific concepts into the classroom. They return to their classrooms in the fall with a better understanding of how scientific principles and practices work in the real world.

Their enthusiasm about the lab experience enables them to develop more enriching class activities and course work, benefiting students who someday might consider a career in science. One teacher alumna from the program's early years says she has used lesson plans based on what she learned at the Summer Institute for nearly a decade.

In addition to making financial contributions to a range of science-centered programs and providing scholarships, Schering-Plough also supports its own scientists as they act as ambassadors for their field.

SPRI scientists annually take part in the Union County 4-H Summer Science Program, giving presentations to youngsters. A collaboration between Rutgers University and the New Jersey 4-H, the program is designed to introduce hands-on science to low-income youth. Since the program launched in 1992, hundreds of children have participated.

The annual New Jersey Brain Bee for high school students is entirely run by scientist volunteers from SPRI, as is a Competitive Scientific Poster Session for high school students. The Brain Bee is a state contest to motivate young people to learn about the brain, capture their imagination and inspire them to pursue careers in brain-related fields. The Competitive Poster Session requires students to conduct scientific research of their choosing and present it to SPRI colleagues in the traditional way scientists worldwide share information.

Did You Know...

Your Company May Be at Risk for Data Loss

By Art Brown - Pre-Paid Legal

All businesses must now conform to new privacy and identity theft laws passed by Congress and the New Jersey Legislature. These new laws challenge every business owner and corporate executive to think very hard about how they must protect the confidential data of their customers, vendors and employees.

If businesses do not protect this data, the consequences of non-compliance could mean fines, penalties and fees levied against the business that could have a serious financial consequence.

Under these new laws, data lost under certain circumstances could place the business at financial risk for lost data. As an employer, if you loose confidential data on your employees and they have their identity stolen, you could be held liable for all of their financial losses as well as the cost to restore their identity.

According to recent statistics, the average financial loss in an identity theft is more than $92,000, with the cost of restoration between $2,000 and $30,000. These are staggering amounts when you multiply these numbers by the potential amount of confidential data retained today.

In addition, an employee could take an average of 600 hours or more restoring their identity. Can you afford to have an employee, especially a "key" employee, away from the job for that length of time?

Surveys also show that if a company has a data breach 20 percent of its customers will no longer do business with them; another 40 percent will consider not doing business with them; and 5 percent will consider taking legal action. These are startling numbers in a world in which we are gathering and maintaining more data than ever before.

So what is the answer? Obviously, protecting confidential information is the key. How can you do that, and still conduct business efficiently and effectively?

Knowledge is the answer. You and your employees must know the laws that affect your business and how to comply with them.

Realizing that businesses come in all shapes and sizes, the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) mandates that every business must make what they call a "reasonable" attempt to comply with these new laws. In making that reasonable attempt, there are certain steps (minimum standards) that every business needs to demonstrate.

Although laws are always subject to change, following are some of new laws a company should consider having either a compliance officer or attorney review to ensure they are in compliance, as they bring with them substantial fines and penalties for non-compliance.

These new privacy laws have created new liability for your company. New requirements to safeguard data include, but are not limited to, making that "reasonable" attempt as stated by the FTC:

- 1. Appoint an Information Security Officer for your company
- 2. Educate your employees by holding the required meetings on privacy and security compliance
- 3. Create a mitigation plan
- 4. Have a Non-Public Information Policy in place and train your employees to follow it
- 5. Document all "Good Faith" measures and keep on this file as proof of your willingness to comply with these new laws

Remember, your company now has absolute liability if you lose data and are noncompliant with these laws. Even without a breach your company may be liable for substantial fines and penalties which could have a negative financial impact.

FACTA, HIPPA, Gramm Leach Bliley Act, New Jersey Identity Theft Law and various other laws have created bankruptcy level exposure around your company's responsibility to safeguard data. The FTC Red Flag Rules, which went into effect Jan I, 2008, make you directly liable for all of the vendors that have access to the sensitive data of your employees and customers.

Even if you believe your business is compliant, Pre-Paid Legal's Program may help your company mitigate some of its potential future liability that a business may have under these new laws. A no-cost 15-20 minute consultation is all that is needed to help you assess your needs. Contact Art Brown, Certified Identity Theft Risk Management Specialist, at 908.730.8400 or identitytheftsolutions@comcast.net.
